Pension cuts outrage unions

Civil servants, teachers hit

Legislation to limit pension benefits for 140,000 B.C. teachers and public servants and to cover a $1 billion shortfall in pension funding was introduced Wednesday.

The legislation — introduced by Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe — is also designed to cover the costs of providing additional benefits to 20,000 others who have already retired.

The move brought immediate protests from the B.G. Government Employees Union and the B.C. Teachers Federation.

BCGEU general secretary John Fryer said: "Our members will be outraged that the government has unilaterally reduced their take home pay.

"There's been no consultation whatsoever. It's a bad piece of legislation and we will be objecting to it most strenuously."

The government action also ignores a resolution passed by the BCTF earlier this spring which asked the government to maintain pensions at a fully-indexed level.

BCTF first vice president Larry Kuehn said teachers are alarmed by runaway inflation rates over the winter and they voted overwhelmingly in April to urge the government to maintain full indexing.

"This request has been ignored by the minister," he said.

The BCTF said the indexing ceiling will work a hardship on retired teachers in periods of high inflation.

Teachers at one time thought they could live with a fixed limit on increases but the runaway inflation experienced over the past winter was a terrifying experience, Kuehn said.

He said the BCTF pensions committee will hold a meeting Friday afternoon to discuss its next move but it will certainly include a request for a meeting with Wolfe on the indexing ceiling.

The key change in the proposed legislation is for one cost-of-living pension increase per year, instead of four.

The single increase would depend on how much money was accumulated over the previous 12 months rather than being tied directly to the consumer price index.

In addition, there would be an absolute limit to the cost-of-living increase.

The ceiling is not included in the legislation but Wolfe later indicated it would be eight per cent.

Wolfe said the present unrestricted indexing system is being replaced with what he called "terminal funding", the eight per cent limit.

There would be no indexing above that level, no matter how high the inflation rate went.

Flag-waving girl offers cheeky support to Trudeau and the campaign

Fired-up PM pegs reform to a flat No to Levesque

By MARY JANIGAN
FP News Service

MONTREAL — A fiery Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau has staked his seat on his ability to over-ride all excuses and drag the provinces to the constitutional bargaining table in the immediate wake of a No victory in the May 20 Quebec referendum.

He told more than 10,000 widly cheering Quebecers crammed into a stadium they must massively reject sovereignty-association to prod Quebec Premier Rene Levesque to attend these talks in a co-operative mood.

And he bitterly lambasted Levesque with the cry "My name is Quebecois — My name is Canadian" because the premier dared to say that Trudeau's middle name of Elliot made him naturally sympathetic to the English and a natural partisan of the Nos.

"Following a No vote we will immediately put in place a mechanism to renew the constitution and we will not stop," shouted Trudeau above waves of deafening applause.

"We (all Quebec MPs) are putting our seats on the line and I say solemnly that we have told the other provinces that we will not accept that a No means no change, that everything is fine.

"We want change."

Since all the other provincial premiers say they aren't interested in a common market with a sovereign Quebec, there can't be any talks on that basis, says Trudeau.

"I'd say: 'Welcome to Ottawa, Mr. Levesque . . . There are two doors — if you knock at the door of sovereignty-association, there won't be any negotiations, because it takes at least one other person to associate, and all the other provinces and Parliament have said no.' "

If Levesque then decides he wants to negotiate simple sovereignty, without an economic association, Trudeau says he'll have to tell the Quebec premier "you haven't got a mandate because you haven't asked that question."

But if Levesque wants to negotiate renewed federalism, Trudeau continued, "I'll say the door is open."

The triumphant rally was Trudeau's final appearance in his turbulent province before the vote and he pleaded passionately with Quebecers to support him in his lifelong battle against the separatist option. Before he could even begin to speak, he was hailed with a four-minute-long standing ovation and riotous victory chants.

"We say No to those who preach separation rather than sharing, No to those who preach isolation rather than fraternity, No to those who preach pride rather than love because love unifies," he cried.

Trudeau said that his final arguments were

Hot day + hot dog = cool con

RED DEER (CP) — A dog catcher has returned a dog to its master just a day after buying it for $30 from a con artist in a bar.

The dog catcher was having a few after a hot day patrolling the streets when he was approached by a man with a dog to sell — and a story to tell. He bought it.

"Of all the people to sell a dog to," Bruce Snider, Red Deer manager of Alberta Animal Control, otherwise known as the dog catchers, shakes his head.

"I know the dog and the owner and I knew it was missing. When I saw the dog in the morning I told him he had bought a dead horse."

Snider reports that dog and master have been reunited and his employee is trying to catch the "dog man".

Weekend full of festivities

Festivities begin Saturday for the Victoria Day weekend and don't let up until Monday when celebrations climax with a parade, regatta and parachute jump. Victorians and visitors alike will be treated to attractions ranging from arts and crafts shows to band concerts.

Carter's order to stop 'dumping' defied by Cuba

Times News Services

Despite President Carter's order to halt the freedom sealift under a threat of fines and boat seizures, 14 boats with 470 refugees aboard arrived at Key West today, bringing the total since the operation began to nearly 43,000.

Up to noon, a number of Cuban vessels had been seized by U.S. immigration officials working on what they termed a case-by-case basis, while their refugee passengers were still being considered for political asylum under the guidelines used prior to Carter's "stop dumping" dictum issued late Wednesday.

And on one pleasure craft which defied the presidential directive, three people crammed below decks died today from apparent carbon monoxide poisoning, bringing the death toll in the sealift to at least 11.

Cuban President Fidel Castro had not yet commented on Carter's action, but the official Cuban Communist newspaper Granma said today that, as far as Havana was concerned, the refugee boatlift could continue as long as boat captains were willing to take people to Florida.

"Carter governs in Florida, but in Mariel, Cuba governs," the newspaper said in an editorial broadcast by Havana radio.

The broadcast, monitored in Miami, said there were 1,208 American-owned boats in the Cuban port of Mariel, the refugee embarkation point, late Wednesday.

The statement was printed less than 12 hours after Carter — saying the unorganized boatlift was too dangerous — ordered that no more boats leave Florida for Cuba and that all boats now in the Cuban port of Mariel return empty.

Carter offered to send U.S. planes and ships to carry refugees safely out of Cuba but said Cuban President Fidel Castro must first agree to let U.S. authorities screen refugees in Cuba before departure.

The United States will no longer allow itself to be used as a "dumping ground" for Cuban criminals and mental patients, Carter said.

A few hours hours after the president appeared before reporters at the White House to reveal the new policy, an airplane chartered by the U.S. government removed several officials and their dependents from the U.S. interests section in Havana, at least temporarily.

Moslems seeking $20B over film

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A suit seeking more than $20 billion in damages alleged to have incurred because of the broadcast of Death of a Princess by the U.S. Public Broadcasting Service was filed in federal court in San Francisco on Wednesday.

The action, filed on behalf of the world's 600 million Moslem population by two Moslem lawyers who are among the plaintiffs, contends the film was produced and aired as part of an "international conspiracy to insult, ridicule, discredit and abuse followers of Islam throughout the world."

Plaintiffs in the suit included Khalid Abdullah Tariq Al Mansour and Faissal Fahd Al Talal, the lawyers who filed the suit; the Concerned Black Africans in Support of Africa and the Middle East; Islamic Centres of America; the Akbar Institute, and the Moslem League of Canada.

Bank rate now 13.34%

OTTAWA (CP) — The Bank of Canada rate tumbled again today, to 13.34 per cent from 14.17 per cent a week earlier, in keeping with a continued drop in money market rates in Canada and the U.S.

The bank's rate cut, for the fifth week in a row, is the second-biggest drop since the introduction in early March of floating rates which allow weekly changes in interest rates.

Seven Canadian chartered banks jumped the gun on Tuesday by announcing they will cut their prime lending rates to 14.75 per cent effective today.

The Royal Bank of Canada, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, the Bank of Nova Scotia and the Continental Bank of Canada dropped their rates by a full percentage point.

The Bank of Montreal, the Toronto Dominion Bank and the Mercantile Bank of Canada dropped their rates by three-quarters of a point.

The prime rates — those charged top-rated customers — now are at the lowest level since the beginning of last November.

In Ottawa, meanwhile, Consumer Affairs Minister Andre Ouellet assured the Commons Wednesday the government is studying recent increases to record levels in credit card interest rates.

Visa, Master Charge, the Hudson's Bay Co. and Simpson-Sears Ltd. have increased their interest rates in response to earlier hikes in prime lending rates at the major chartered banks.

Babysitters molested

The incident was one of three involving women police are investigating in three municipalities.

A woman of about 25 told Victoria police she was raped in her apartment in the 1100 block of Queens at 5 a.m. and Esquimalt police are investigating an incident in which a 38-year-old woman was beaten and robbed as she waited for a ride to work at the intersection of Admirals and Esquimalt.

Saanich police said the man arrested in the babysitting case will appear in court to face charges of indecent assault, attempted rape, unlawful confinement, and possession of an offensive weapon — a knife.

A spokesman said a man apparently gained access to the home where the girls, aged 13 and 14, were babysitting by representing himself as a friend of the parents.

Police were called at 1 a.m. and the suspect was later arrested.

Victoria detectives were still investigating the rape complaint this morning.

Esquimalt police said the woman victim in the beating case was not seriously hurt and that a small sum of money and jewelry was taken by her assailant.

Liquor firms used influence

Consumer Affairs Minister Jim Nielsen confirmed Wednesday that complaints from eastern liquor companies contributed to a decision last December to move the director of purchasing for the Liquor Distribution Branch into a new post.

Nick Clark was shifted into the post of senior policy adviser to LDB general manager Bob Wallace.

Nielsen denied however that the complaints centred on the LDB's agents stocking program, a Clark brainchild which has saved the branch millions of dollars by forcing the liquor companies to pay for their own warehousing.

"The agent stocking program was introduced a couple of years ago and is working quite well. It created a lot of negative comment from the industry at the time but not any longer," Neilsen said.

The minister refused to say what the complaints about Clark involved, calling it a confidential matter.

However, he confirmed that allegations of arrogance were made and personality problems may have been involved.

"Certain problems were raised; those problems were then investigated. Certain conclusions were made and decisions were reached," Neilsen said.

He would not comment on the suggestion that Clark had been shuffled out of his old job because the big distilleries didn't like the success of his program and didn't like him.

The minister said Clark has not lost any salary by the move and has not lodged an appeal.

Clark is currently being paid more than his 1979 salary of $36,360 he received while director of purchasing.

He refused comment on his transfer.

Clark was moved, according to an article in The Vancouver Sun, after a meeting in Victoria attended by Nielsen, his deputy minister Peter Bazowski, Wallace and several eastern-based senior executives from major Canadian distillers who had asked for the meeting.

Dave Roche, executive vice-president of Seagrams, said the meeting was private.

Another senior distillery official whose firm was represented at the meeting said: "Clark's very brilliant. But he's the most arrogant ———— I've ever met. He was trying to pit one side of the industry against another."

Hard bargaining in wake of No vote

not addressed to those who were voting for separation but to those who were toying with a Yes vote to foster change. He pointed out that Levesque has dismissed a No vote as a mere bid for the status quo that would leave Quebecers "twisting in circles".

Thus he concluded that only a massive No vote would force the premier to the constitutional bargaining table in a mood to do business: "Yes leads only to independence and separation for Quebec or the status quo because Levesque refuses to negotiate renewed federalism."

Trudeau once again mocked Levesque's assertion that "a spirit of fair play" would force the provinces and the federal government to the bargaining table.

He asked his audience to imagine that Newfoundland residents had suddenly voted 100 per cent in favor of re-opening their deal to provide cheap power for Quebec. He scoffed at the notion that Levesque would even consider cooperating with Newfoundland.

"It's clear that the referendum can democratically express the view of Quebec but it cannot force others to want to do what Quebec wants," he said. "There is no vote in the other provinces."

Trudeau went on the castigate Levesque for his criticism of the Anglophone sound of his middle name.

"At heart I am a Quebecer — just like those who want to vote Yes," he said. "It's saying that Quebecers for the No have foreign blood in their veins and that the Yes supporters have pure blood.

"It's saying that the Nos are not as good as Quebecers who vote Yes."

Pension limits for provincial workers

"It is a more reasonable funding approach."

If it were left as open-ended indexing, he said, the pension plans might be hard put to meet their responsibilities 20 or 30 years down the road.

Wolfe introduced five pieces of legislation amending existing pension acts.

They include several other significant amendments, including one which permits the government to lend provincial pension funds to the Transpo 86 exhibition proposed for Vancouver.

The government is moving to improve pension benefits for retired teachers. More than 2,000 former teachers who retired between 1962 and 1976 will qualify for increases ranging from a low of one dollar to a high of $350 a month.

Cost of these adjustments — estimated at $10 million over a period of years — will be borne equally by working teachers and the provincial government.

The amendments also provide minor improvements for retired public service employees and their beneficiaries.

The government plans to increase the funding of future basic benefits of both the teachers' plan and the municipal plan.

That means teachers will have to pay an extra 0.5 per cent of salary in pension contributions while government increases its contributions by more than two per cent of salary.

Based on current payrolls, the additional government contribution will come to more than $12 million a year.

In the case of the municipal plan, employees will pay an extra 0.27 per cent of salary and the employers an extra 0.47 per cent to bring the plan to the required funding level.

Those increases were recommended by the Union of B.C. Municipalites, Wolfe said.

There will also be a break for public sector employees who withdraw their contributions from their pension plan before retirement.

Up to now they have been paid only four per cent interest on their money for the time it has been in the pension scheme.

Now the pension plans will be given the flexibility to pay more in times of high interest rates.

Wolfe told reporters that B.C.'s public sector pension plans are in very good shape. The most recent figures available, from 1977, show the plans with $1 billion in unfunded liabilities.

"However there is $2.5 billion in funds set aside and we are not in any difficulty at all," the minister said.

Children stone peacemaker

JOHANNESBURG (Reuter) — A mob of black schoolchildren stoned a man to death Wednesday as he tried to persuade them to end a month-long protest against South Africa's racially-segregated education system.

Police identified the victim as taxi driver Alfred Soya, 49, one of nine blacks appointed as peacemakers by parents to try to persuade the children to give up their class boycott.

Witnesses said the crowd of about 2,000 youngsters turned on the men who fled in a hail of stones. Soya fell and his head was smashed.

Walkout severs rail freight link

CP Rail's freight link to Vancouver Island remained shut down today as a result of a 24-hour study session by licensed officers employed by the company's marine division.

The session — called to protest lack of progress in contract talks — closed operations Wednesday night.

The 75 officers are represented by the Canadian Merchant Service Guild.

Guild spokesman Leo Gray said Wednesday the study session means the ferry Princess of Vancouver won't make its first run of the season between Vancouver and Nanaimo.

The action started as a walkout at 5 p.m. Wednesday, but the officers decided later to make it a 24-hour study session.

They were to return to work at 5:30 p.m. today but Gray said that unless substantial progress is made in contract talks, another walkout or study session could occur.

CP Rail's three truck and rail ferries, part of a vital freight link between the mainland and Vancouver Island, also would be halted, he said.

But Gray said the Princess Patricia cruise ship will leave as scheduled today on its trip to Alaska necause the union does not want to inconvenience passengers who booked their trip months ago.

Main issue in the dispute is money, Gray said.

CP Rail ferries were idled by the recent month-long strike by its 60 unlicenced deckhands, creating long lineups at B.C. Ferry terminals, but traffic manager Bill Bouchard of the B.C. Ferry Corp. said the Crown company is better prepared this time for a strike against CP Rail.

Bouchard said that summer schedules, which go into effect Friday, will mean more sailings, with 32 crossings of Georgia Strait daily.

the weather

Except for mostly sunny skies along the outer coast, a few showers or thunder showers will continue to dominate British Columbia today. A high pressure ridge off the coast will gradually spread drier, more stable air over the province on Friday and Saturday. A system moving into the Gulf of Alaska will spread cloud and precipitation onto the north coast on Friday.

The kingdom beyond the mountains

VANCOUVER — This is a land of warring regions and cultural enclaves, as we know, but almost no one knows The Kingdom Beyond the Mountains.

The concept of British Columbia as a world unto itself, a unique retreat facing towards the Pacific and away from the rest of the nation, has always puzzled most Canadians.

Premier Bill Bennett, in a speech written by some of the finer minds around Victoria, made pains before the Montreal Board of Trade this week to explain some of the funny-peculiar and ignored aspects of British California.

The headline emphasis on the tentative foray into the wilds of Montreal, of course, was on the Bennett view of sovereignty-association (divorce with bed privileges as he calls it). But buried within the text was a more interesting thread, an explanation of why B.C. is so, well, um, different.

It is a favorite and familiar theme of Bennett: the theory that B.C. was formed and shaped by forces from abroad rather than the usual drift westward of Canadians.

The early settlers of B.C. came by ship around Cape Horn. The Klondike and Fraser River gold rushes brought a deluge of buccaneers from California.

The first industries of B.C. were linked to these points of origin — capital found in London and San Francisco rather than in Toronto and Montreal.

One bit of the fallout from California he did not mention. A chap called William Smith, born in the dull Maritimes, during his stay in the California gold fields grew bored with his monicker, changed his name to Amor de Cosmos, migrated to B.C., became its second premier and once made a legislative speech lasting 20 hours. Lotus Land has honest roots.

A significant portion of B.C. pioneers came from the Orient, Bennett pointed out. True — Vancouver's Chinatown outranks any other on this continent.

What he did not mention is that most of those early Chinese were imported as sweated labor to build and die for a railway for the greater glory of the CPR.

He is forgiven, one supposes, for not mentioning the fact that among the innocent Japanese-Canadians interned in work camps at the start of the Second World War were such as Tommy Shoyama, later a deputy finance minister of Canada, and the celebrated Senator Sam Hayakawa, who has now reversed the flow to California.

The essential thrust of the Bennett argument holds water. The unique and obstreperous nature of the socialist and labor movement in B.C. — the most highly unionized and militant province of the 10 — owes much to the fact that Fabian socialists from Britain, landing in B.C. like on the Pacific islands, dug in on a lone beachhead.

It's still one of the reasons why an observer, listening to the accents of B.C. union leaders, paraphrased Napoleon and concluded that Britain is a "nation of shop stewards."

B.C. has always been spiced from afar.

W.A.C. Bennett, the 20-year icon, was from New Brunswick by way of Edmonton.

B.C. is the only western province never to have provided a prime minister (and to tell the truth is rather proud of it).

Bennett in his Montreal speech made mention once again — for the 94th time — of inadequate representation on the Supreme Court of Canada. When in 1978, a B.C. judge, Mr. Justice William McIntyre, was appointed to the Supreme Court of Canada, it was the first B.C. appointment in 16 years, only the second since the war. Ottawa, acknowledging guilt, appointed McIntyre to "an Ontario seat" on the court.

He made a token reference to the Senate. The Senate, as we know, is a joke, a useful pasture for Liberal hacks, but it's become an even more ludicrous joke in B.C., with the third largest population in the country allowed just six patronage hacks. Even slush funds aren't equal.

Defeated minister gets post

BURNABY (CP) — Elwood Veitch, a former Social Credit tourism minister defeated in last May's provincial election, has been hired to a $35,230 post at the Pacific Vocational Institute here.

Henry Justesen, principal and chief executive officer, said Veitch, defeated in Burnaby-Willingdon by Jim Lorimer, New Democratic Party MLA, was chosen from two or three candidates who applied for the advertised position.

He denied there was any political influence or consideration in the selection.

Justesen said Veitch had worked at the institute in the latter part of 1979 as a consultant on courses for people wanting to set up small businesses.

He said Veitch is interested in vocational training and is more than qualified for the job, holding a Masters in Business Administration.

Tighten safety: firemen

VERNON (CP) — The B.C. Association of Professional Firefighters wants the provincial government to amend the Compensation Act to improve regulations governing firemen's protective clothing and safety equipment.

The proposed redraft of the act, prepared by a committee of firemen and fire chiefs, will be submitted to the Workers Compensation Board in about a month, an association spokesman said.

B.C. fire chiefs passed a similar request at their convention last week in Cranbrook.

The call for an amendment is the second issue involving the Workers Compensation Board dealt with by this annual convention.

Forced retirement verdict pushed

VANCOUVER (CP) — The International Woodworkers of America wants the highest court in the country to decide whether forced retirement violates the B.C. Human Rights Code.

Jack Munro, union western regional president, said Wednesday the union will apply to the Supreme Court of Canada for leave to appeal a unanimous B.C. Court of Appeal decision upholding the involuntary retirement of millwright Kazimer Shuflita of Crambrook by Crestbrook Forest Industries Ltd.

Shuflita had worked for the company for 31 years.

If leave to appeal is granted, the test case will finally settle a question that has been the subject of several labor arbitration hearings during the last two years.

If the appeal application is refused, the appeal court's April 22 decision will stand. It ruled that mandatory retirement if enforced by a consistent management policy is not in violation of the code.

In August, 1978, arbitrator Joe Weiler ruled that compulsory retirement at age 65 was a contravention of the Human Rights Code and ordered the Prince Rupert Fishermen's Co-operative Association to reinstate a worker who was forced to retire.

Wickaninnish Inn reopening Friday

VANCOUVER (CP) — Wickaninnish Inn at Long Beach on the west coast of Vancouver Island, closed in 1977, will reopen in part Friday as a family-style restaurant.

But the second phase of the conversion and rebuilding project — a nature interpretation centre — has been halted by a freeze on federal government spending.

Frank Camp, superintendent of Pacific Rim National Park, said Wednesday that George Yates, director-general of Parks Canada, will preside at Friday's opening of the 84-seat public restaurant.

A new building for the nature interpretation centre has been erected and the wiring and plumbing is finished.

Fire doubles its size

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — A fire along the Hay River between Fort Nelson and the Alberta border, is burning out of control and has doubled its size to encompass about 3,500 acres, a B.C. Forest Service spokesman said Wednesday.

Tom Waller, service duty officer, said there was no precipitation overnight to help dampen the blaze and firemen are not sure when they will be able to bring it under control.

Free recreation centre

MACKENZIE (CP) — This northern community has managed to get itself a recreation centre for free.

Administrator Vern Ciccone said Wednesday said tenders submitted were about $50,000 less than anticipated. With $2.1 million in gifts and grants promised, there will be about $150,000 left over for extras such as a lighted parking lot, additional furnishings and equipment for a concession stand.

Included in the centre is a 25-metre indoor swimming pool, a library, an ice arena and curling rink.

No uranium risk in fruit: study

VANCOUVER (CP) — Okanagan fruit was given a clean bill of health Wednesday by a government health physicist who is involved in uranium research in the Okanagan valley.

Preliminary results of a study show "you would have to eat a hell of a lot of apples before there was any indication of uranium," said Wayne Greene, director of the provincial health ministry's radiation protection service.

BONUS DRAW METHOD EXPLAINED

How 20 numbers determine 11,880 cash winners. In the ticket issue of the Western Express for May 7 and May 14, each possible last four-digit combination appears 594 times. Thus when 20 numbers are drawn these will generate 20 x 594 = 11,880 winning tickets which will have the last four digits in the correct order. 10,560 will only have the last 4 digits in the correct order; 1,200 will only have the last 5 digits in the correct order; 120 will have the last 6 digits in the correct order. Thus by drawing 20 six-digit winning bonus numbers at random, 11,880 cash prize winning tickets will be determined.

Worst possible answer

Efforts to gain a new transportation terminal for Greater Victoria appear to have come to a grinding halt.

For more than two months now, the Urban Transit Authority and other related agencies have been considering what transportation services should be located in a new terminal centre and what the best site for it would be. Unfortunately, the agencies can't come to an agreement.

A UTA committee proposed that the new terminal should be built near the existing terminal (at Douglas and Humboldt) and should include facilities for inter-city buses, city transit, and tour buses. A future hook-up with the E & N dayliner services was even considered a possibility.

A Capital Regional District committee, however, recommended that the new terminal should be built north of Yates Street and that it should service only inter-city buses. Metro Transit, the operating company for city buses, also favors a location in northern downtown.

Given this conflicting advice, the provincial government has bounced the ball into a new court. The municipal affairs ministry announced this week that the board of directors of Pacific Coach Lines, the government-owned company that runs all inter-city buses serving Victoria, will make the final decision.

The ministry is urging all interested parties to offer their opinions and studies to the PCL board, but is leaving the decision to the company.

This is the worst possible answer to the problem.

The question of a new transportation terminal should not be dealt with by PCL alone. The decision will greatly affect the future of all land transportation in the Victoria core.

The location of a new terminal will influence the development of tourism and the provision of new urban transit services. It will certainly have an effect on traffic patterns in the downtown core.

If PCL decides to build only an inter-city terminal, the idea of an integrated transportation centre in Victoria will not be realized for many years, perhaps decades.

The best possible solution would be for the involved parties to struggle again to find a compromise that they can live with relatively happily.

If that is impossible, the final decision should be made by a body not directly connected with any faction in the dispute, probably the provincial government itself.

A decision affecting so many facets of Victoria should not be taken unilaterally by one party to the issue.

Turkey and egg

Agriculture Minister Jim Hewitt omitted a bit of history this week when he announced the government's change of policy on a takeover in the poultry industry.

Hewitt said the B.C. government will ask the federal Foreign Investment Review Agency (FIRA) to allow the international agriculture corporation Cargill Grain Company to take over Maplewood Poultry. It was the provincial government's opposition that convinced FIRA to disallow the Cargill application earlier this year.

Hewitt said the government had changed its mind reluctantly because a Cargill takeover would give the company major control over the B.C. turkey industry. Control of Maplewood will give Cargill control 80 per cent of B.C.'s turkey processing and 100 per cent of its turkey poult production.

That is almost a monopoly situation, and Hewitt is certainly right in declaring that it isn't the sort of healthy competition needed in the food industry.

The interesting history question is: How did Cargill become so well positioned in the B.C. turkey industry that a major purchase would give it a virtual monopoly?

It did so through the purchase of a company called Panco Poultry, one of the major poultry processing firms in the province, some three years ago.

And who was the previous owner of Panco Poultry who sold it to the foreign conglomerate?

Why, none other than the B.C. government.

Why, none other than Jim Hewitt.

Tories' single-man attack

OTTAWA — A fascinating game of search-and-destroy is going on in the House of Commons.

Each day, during Question Period, the Tories choose one Liberal cabinet minister, inundate him with a relentless series of questions and see if he can take it. While the peppering progresses, the House of Commons television cameras helpfully zero in.

Their three chief targets, to date, have been Finance Minister Allan MacEachen, Industry Minister Herb Gray and Treasury Board President Don Johnston.

The remaining 27 ministers who sit in the Commons, with Manpower Minister Lloyd Axworthy high on the list — will each have their day, promises chief Tory strategist Bill Neville.

Non-answers

MacEachen was first on their list because the Tories hoped to take advantage of public dissatisfaction over last month's painfully high interest rates. But the 58-year-old political veteran reacted in his usual unflappable style, slithering out of question after question with the non-answers for which he has become famous in his 17-year cabinet career. He seemed mildly intrigued by the opposition's tactics.

Gray was next because of widespread concern over the fate of Chrysler Corp. Questions rained down on him last week over the government's inability to come up with a financial rescue package for the faltering automaker. But he replied to each query with such an intense barrage of facts, figures and good intentions that he emerged largely unscathed.

This week it's Johnston's turn. The Tories have nicknamed the 43-year-old Montreal tax lawyer "minister in charge of the pork barrel" and have accused him of wasting millions of tax dollars to make sure faithful Liberals would benefit from his spending decisions.

With a Parliamentary career of less than three years — and a mere two months as a cabinet minister — under his belt, Johnston appears slightly more rattled than his colleagues.

Neville, obviously pleased with the strategy, has no qualms or apologies.

"Part of any opposition approach is an assessment of who is most vulnerable," he said Wednesday. "Of course, we want to test the credibility of the government and find out where the weak spots are.

"We're trying to use at least the first part of Question Period to focus in on one area, which usually means one minister, with a sustained series of questions.

DON JOHNSTON
. . . under the gun this week

"It's not only a case of showing who (which cabinet ministers) can be prodded into making stupid mistakes. You want to expose people who, by their style, create the impression of being secretive or ill-informed."

Johnston was personally blamed this week for:

— Changing the site of Eldorado Nuclear's (a Crown agency) planned uranium refinery to Blind River, which is in Mines Minister Judy Erola's Liberal riding, from Port Hope, in a Conservative constituency.

— Reversing a Tory plan to move Parks Canada from Peterborough, in a Tory riding, to Cornwall, which is in Trade Minister Ed Lumley's riding.

Opposition leader Joe Clark says the combined pricetag to taxpayers of the three decisions is $50 million.

Johnston, exhasuted from campaigning almost every night for the federalist forces in next week's Quebec referendum, countered each of the Conservative charges by assuring MPs that these decisions were made on the basis of solid economic analysis by his officials. He was trying to get Canadians the best deal for their dollars.

But the minister sounded tired. He did not bark out his answers with the assurance of a seasoned House of Commons fighter.

Neville, who has known Johnston since their school-days, said a cabinet minister should expect this sort of attack. "The Grits used to hit (Energy Minister Ray) Hnatyshyn with 42 questions a day.

More to come

More — and better — is in store, he says. The Tories are just getting their technique perfected.

"But I don't want to overrate the whole thing. It's just part of being an effective Opposition.

Meanwhile, in the Senate, the three Liberal cabinet ministers appear to need little help from their Tory critics to come off looking evasive and uninformed. The Upper House is rapidly turning into a maelstrom of rage and confusion.

Asked recently whether he planned a concerted single-man, single-issue attack similar to the one being conducted in the Commons, Conservative Leader Jacques Flynn replied: "Sometimes, I have the feeling that it's hardly worth the trouble."

WALTER STEWART

Pen, ink and shaving cream

OTTAWA — With yet another postal strike on the way — the Canadian Union of Postal Workers will be in a legal position to walk out seven days after delivery of a conciliation report which is due any day now — Canadians may want to get out the pen, ink and shaving cream.

Only a suggestion.

In ancient Greece, one of the classier ways to send a letter was to call in a slave, crop his head, write a message on the bare dome, and send him on his way.

If it was necessary to keep the message secret, the slave was held incommunicado until he had grown enough hair to cover it. The recipient then shaved the slave and read his letter.

The time involved in growing the hair was considered a drawback, but compared to, say, sending a letter from Montreal to Lethbridge by modern post, it appears reasonable.

Head tax

It was the historian Herodotus who first recorded the shave-a-slave mail service, but he forgot to record how much it cost, or where you put the stamps. Perhaps there were no stamps, and the whole process was covered by a head tax.

It was also Herodotus who wrote, 'Neither snow, nor rain, nor gloom of night stays these couriers from the swift completion of their appointed rounds."

This was not a reference to the slaves, but to the regular courier service run by King Xerxes. Of course, there was no CUPW around in Xerxes' time, no postal codes nor sorting machines nor conciliation reports, virtually none of the modern conveniences that stop our couriers, or inside workers, from their appointed rounds faster than you can say "Contract time."

If postal strikes are going to be with us at regular intervals — we have had three national strikes and innumerable local walkouts since 1972 — ways around the ordinary mail service are going to have to be devised. Fortunately, there are dozens of suggestions available, from techniques used centuries ago to those looming over the horizon in the advanced computer age.

King Sargon of Chaldea, to name an instance, used to communicate with his penpals by carving his words on a clay tablet and sending a courier on his way. Hernia was a frequent complaint, but not postal theft.

The Assyrians used the same technique until they discovered that spies from enemy h.q. were reading the messages. So they invented the envelope, a clay wrapping that went around the carved tablets and raised the hernia-count but preserved the secrets.

The Egyptians used pigeons to carry messages until their enemies developed the habit of eating the birds. The technique was then pigeon-holed until 1870, when Paris was under seige by the Prussians, and Parisians sent out no less than 115,000 messages by carrier pigeon. Apparently the Prussians didn't fancy pigeon. No doubt they resented getting the bird.

Why not bring back pigeons?

In the early days of this nation, it was customary to leave mail with an inn-keeper, or to have the couriers-de-bois drop off missives as they paddled their way across the land. Again, there is no reason why both these techniques should not be revived, with a consequent increase in the revenues of liquor companies and canoe manufacturers. Chrysler Canada could switch some of its redundant workers to making paddles. The company is already expert at back-watering.

More modern techniques are already in place, or just down the road. During the last mail strike, in 1978, a number of firms developed their own courier services, to deliver packages, letters and bills and to pick up cheques. After the strike, some of these firms kept doing their own deliveries, or hired outside contractors. The post office frowns on this sort of thing — carrying the mail is a crown monopoly — but has not been able to, um, stamp it out.

Two Toronto-area public utilities, in Scarboro and East York, have found it faster and cheaper to have hydro bills delivered by an independent contractor than to trust them to the tender mercies of Canada Post. The independent charges 11 cents instead of 17 per envelope, and guarantees delivery within 24 hours instead of the flexible schedule of the public service, which often has hydro bills being delivered after the date for benefitting from the time-discount is well past.

The hydro couriers are now beginning to carry other mail — bulk items such as catalogues and advertising flyers — but the widespread use of this system is not likely.

It collides with the post office's allotted right to lose, delay or destroy the mail free of outside competition.

Far more likely in the future is the development of electronic mail services either using home key-boards or cable television.

This story is written on an electric keyboard which stores words on a disc, from which they can be sent to anyone with a similar keyboard and receiver system. They are presently sent to newspapers, but could just as easily go to your Aunt Min, as long as she had a telephone and a word-processor.

At present, the equipment is far too expensive — $6,000 and up for a single machine — to be used to transmit letters. However, costs are coming down for all electonic components, and a number of futurologists, including Alvin Toffler, author of The Third Wave, are confidently predicting a day when the post office's major functions will be replaced by these word-processing and transmitting machines.

They can just as easily handle bill-paying, invoicing and the whole range of what is known as electronic funds tranfers, from processing payrolls to charging the groceries. Instead of having our lives made miserable by the onslaught of batteries of computers, it will be possible to have everything loused up in the security and comfort of our own living-rooms.

TV link

In the same way, when multiple cable hookups for television become widespread, it will be feasible to designate one or a number of channels as communication links, for use by individuals in return for either a monthly fee or a fee-per-message service.

These techniques will be a great deal faster, and may in time be cheaper, than using the post office.

Of course, it will always be possible to bring the electronic mail services down by striking the communications centres, or satellite relay posts, or even the manufacturing concerns that turn out the equipment.

Then it will be back to the pen, ink, and shaving cream.

Pollen's view

Bob Wright's personally abusive letter in your column of May 6 says a great deal about the man but nothing about the basic issues before the community. His "switchblade" attempt to kill the messenger with abuse merely underlines the problems confronting our city.

The issue is still the same: many citizens are sincerely concerned with the proposed site for the Conference Centre. Many feel that the waterfront should be open space to enhance the uniqueness of the Inner Harbour. But Alderman Wright refuses to address himself to the issue, merely stating "the property density of the Centre is less than one quarter allowed." Is this any justification, any rationale for the siting for the development? But the alderman's statement is also not true as the property is public property and subject to no zoning.

The other basic issue is the issue of conflict of interest.

Again I suggest the aggressive alderman is too personally involved in land, government leases, land development, bus lines, amusement exhibits to be chairman of planning.

And I suggest further that the president of the Chamber of Commerce (the group aggressively promoting the Centre) who has just purchased an interest in the property next to the Centre is ethically out of line.

And further, I suggest that Sam Bawlf, the original proponent of the location should, out of common decency, refrain from using the proposed site of the Centre in the promotion of his luxury condominium apartment hotel. His promotional brochure in reference to the lack of parking in his development states "ample visitor parking will be made available in the 250 car civic parkade to be constructed on the adjacent site."

As a member of the business community, as a former mayor of the city, yes as a civic leader, I am justifiably concerned with the present state of civic affairs. Rather than attempting to divert the issues with personal abuse, Alderman Wright would serve the public better by justifying his actions and those of his business colleagues. — Peter Pollen, 3470 Upper Terrace.

Salvage lives

I write to encourage support of such service ventures as the Life-centered Learning Hospice described in your pages May 3 by reporter Derek Sidenius.

I have no personal contact with this organization or its personnel but I have had seven years of recent experience teaching and working with disturbed and delinquent youth and recognize the acute needs this organization is seeking to address.

If the provincial ministries were active in developing salvage and and support programs, this type of service would be redundant. This is not the case and increasing numbers of youths are being "contained" (read jailed) at a cost of over $100 per day to an overly taxed populace.

A great many of these youths could profit from a program of the kind Mr. Bullied proposes to provide for $44 per day. He has been offered the going rate for care of group home residents and has rightly refused. His facility is staffed and equipped to offer the intense teaching and support needed to assist problem juveniles and give them a realistic chance at some successes in life. Such service cannot succeed on "nickel-and-dime" funding. Dedicated staff and adequate facilities are required and fair wages and expenses should be paid.

Until such time as the ministries of human resources and corrections can offer comparable services at comparable prices, let us use and pay for the privately offered programs. My own experience teaching emotionally disturbed and delinquent children in both detention settings and public schools has shown me that helping these children is not easy, quick or cheap, but it is absolutely essential that the effort be made. The long term cost in human and financial terms will be enormous if we fail to address this challenge with our most sincere efforts.

The ministries of human resources and attorney-general must invest some of our dollars in finding out whether the "Life-centered Learning Hospice" can deliver good service for the money they are asking for. If the format is effective, let it continue and perhaps expand as a model for other programs.

I want my government to invest $44 per day in a few children to try and salvage some young lives. How about you? — Ken Lutes, 1253 McKenzie Street.

Plural problems a collective woe

"The word 'none,' " it was patiently explained to me, "is rooted in 'not one,' or 'no one.' Right?"

Right.

"And subjects should be followed by predicates that agree — right?"

Right.

"Then why do you say 'none are,' you blithering idiot, when the correct usage is 'none is'?"

Wrong. Sometimes you should say "none is," and at other times you should say "none are." The real question is — how many or how much do you mean by "none"?

If you mean "Not one of those blithering idiots ever gets it right," then you can say "none is" or "none ever gets"; if you mean "Not even a few of those blithering idiots," it should be "none are."

Since that requires mindreading on the part of your listener, it makes sense to say "not one" when you mean "not one," and not to fuzz up the atmosphere: let "none" stand as a collective noun to be construed as plural. "Nobody's perfect" says, Not one of us is perfect"; if you want to lump in a few other imperfect souls as part of your subject, say "None of us are perfect."

A collective-noun collector named Stephen Nojeim of Amherst (pronounced without the "h" sound), Mass., sent me a test. Since flunking exams is unbecoming to language columnists, I sent it along to Jacques Barzun, in the house of intellect at Scribner's, where he updates Modern American Usage. The upper-case choices within the parentheses are Barzun's.

"A group of college students (was/WERE) discussing the subject of collective nouns the other day. A few of us (was/WERE) under the impression that if the noun encompassed a totality, the singular form should be used. But something I saw while jogging later that day forced me to question that. I saw a pair of dogs that (was/WERE) fighting. Or was it that a couple of dogs (was/WERE) fighting?"

Comments Mr. Barzun: "The verb forms underlined [shown here in uppercase] are those that come without second thought to any idiomatic speaker or writer. Some forms are impossible and some demonstrably wrong — e.g., 'A few of us was.' 'Few' is more than one, and the preceding 'a' does not make it singular.

"That very example," continues Mr. Barzun, "leads straight to the important point that the letter writer overlooked: Most of his sentences are so framed that the relative pronoun most naturally refers to a plural noun: 'Dogs that were fighting.' When that is true, it would take a mental contortion to make that refer to pair and say, 'was fighting.' "

The letter test by Mr. Nojeim continues: "A number of my colleagues (has/HAVE) approached me to determine just what it is I am investigating. I tell them that a variety of methods (has/HAVE) been employed to study stress levels of students trying to learn grammar. . . . There (IS/are) a bunch more questions I have, but (it/THEY) can wait."

Says Mr. Barzun: "As soon as he adds a plural modifier, doubt is at an end." (When Mr. Nojeim adds "a number of" and "a variety of," he knows clearly he is talking about more than one, and his meaning calls for a plural verb.) "As for a rule on the collective noun," advises Mr. Barzun, "there is only one reliable one: interpret the noun as you like, but stick to singular or plural after you've made your choice. What is bad is: 'The army was in high spirits but their boots were defective.' "

I would go for a tougher rule: Use "none" to mean quantity ("Let's have none of that") and not to mean "not one." When you mean "nobody," say "nobody" — don't go around singing "None knows the troubles I've seen."

Query

A reader slid out from under a car long enough to complain about my calling auto mechanics "grease monkeys."

"Monkey" has lost its connotation of cuteness and has become pejorative: Anwar el-Sadat recently told a group of Americans that he agreed with Golda Meir's characterization of Libya's President Muammar el-Qaddafi as "a monkey with a checkbook."

For a piece on occupational derogations, would the Lexicographic Irregulars pass along slurs like "paper pusher" for bureaucrat, or "thumbsucker" for columnist?

Inconceivable Conceptions

The exploration of olive sizes — medium is small, jumbo is fairly big, colossal is large — has led us to consider the nomenclature of tornadoes.

Tornadoes come in seven sizes, and are classified by the Fujita-Pearson scale. Prof. T. Theodore Fujita of the University of Chicago, who has done for scaling big storms what Richter has done for earth-quakes, judges tornadoes by wind speed, path length and width.

Very weak is the first size, with winds up to 116 kilometers per hour; snaps off TV antennas. Then weak, up to 180 km/h, overturning trailers. Next come strong tornadoes, which tear roofs off houses and blow autos off highways with winds up to 252 km/h Severe is the next category, up to 331-km/h winds, uprooting trees and blowing down walls, followed by devastating, up to 428 km/h — this compares to "mammoth" in olive sizes — and then to incredible, up to 511-km/h winds, carrying houses considerable distances. The final classification is named inconceivable.

Since 1916, we have had 24,930 tornadoes, of which about 20,000 were in the fist three categories, up to strong. Only 127 tornadoes were incredible, and we have yet to be afflicted with a single inconceivable.

"I do not have a sophisticated command of the English language," says Professor Fujita modestly, "and the words I picked for tornadoes were words that seemed right."

Why was "incredible" selected? "Because very few people have seen an F-5 tornado. For those who have witnessed such a tornado, the event is incredible. Incredible is not impossible, though it is sometimes difficult to believe."

And "inconceivable"? "We have had no report yet on an F-6. Nuclear power plants are required by law to protect against an F-6 tornado. The statistical probability of an F-6 occurring is once every 10 million years — and that's in tornado country. I think of it as inconceivable."

Northrop Frye: Academia's intellectual terrorist?

Out of the oppressed levels of American academia came the Dialogue of the Two Centurions:

"What's up?"

"It's that guy we crucified last year . . . somehow I can't get him out of my mind."

"What about him, then?"

"Well, it seems he was a great teacher."

"I know, but he never published nuttin."

Teaching for some years at a large American university and listening to colleagues both in that university and in others, I came to feel the force of that anecdote. The quality of the teaching was, somehow, neither here nor there. What went on in a person's classroom, like what went on in a person's bedroom, was felt to be that person's own business. You could, if you cared to, easily find out what the students thought about the teachers. Students made their own ratings, and these were circulated. Out of the ratings, senior members of the academic body generally took note only of the extremes. So-and-so was very unpopular with the students, What's-his-name very popular with these. This caused So-and-so to rise slightly in the esteem of colleagues, What's-his-name to drop slightly. So-and-so might well be a person of rugged integrity, a putter-down of bumptious brats. What's-his-name was clearly a charlatan.

Student ratings of academics as teachers were irrelevant (or "counter-indicative") and no other rating of teaching was attempted. On the other hand, ratings of one's publications, by other academics, was all-important. On that rating depended one's prestige for the present and one's hopes for the future. These hopes, for the ambitious, were towards higher rank, more money, even more prestige and, above all, lower teaching loads: that, above all, because the less teaching you have to do, the more time you have to prepare and publish your publications, so the higher rise youre ratings, so the higher your rank, etc., etc. The Moment of Attainment of Less Teaching (MALT) is the take-off point of the promising academic career. University teachers are esteemed academically in inverse proportion to the amount they teach.

Now, in certain areas, this priority given to publication — meaning, of course, academic publication — is quite defensible. Where what is published is a report of something found out — an interesting hypothesis tested, and either exploded or established as fact — then it may reasonably be claimed that publication is more important than teaching, since those who find something new are doing something more important than those who are simply telling other people about things that have already been found. Philosophically even that much can be challenged, but pragmatically, in a rough, rude way, it stands up.

Broadly speaking, in the natural sciences, the primacy of publication is justifiable. In those fields, the criteria are sufficiently agreed to prevent 'publication' lending itself to any great proliferation of pretentious nonsense.

In what are called 'the humanities,' there are no such criteria, therefore no such barrier to the spread of pretentious nonsense, which flourishes accordingly — and whose most skilled and brazen practitioners also flourish accordingly.

This particular vegetation is most luxuriant in the region of literary studies, especially in the study of the literature of our own language. How, after all, do you study literature? Studying the stuff can't just be the same as reading it, enjoying it, or being moved by it — anyone can do those things, even the bloody scientists. Study has got to be hard, like science. And so it is, hard like science, proclaim some of the most iminent professors of lit-crit. Thus that formidable pundit Professor Northrop Frye:

"Everyone who has seriously studied literature knows that the mental process involved is as coherent and progressive as the study of science."

That is interesting as an example of a sentence which carries within it the automatic excommunication of anyone who disagrees with it. If you venture to dissent from Professor Frye's opinion, you are just proving that you have not seriously studied the subject of study, and you are thereby inviting yourself to shut up and go home.

Ambitious young lit-crit academics are not only unlikely to venture to disagree with professor Frye, they are most unlikely to want to disagree with him. From their point of view — in their competition with scientific, technological and other colleagues for scarce resources — the Frye Doctrine is the stuff to give the troops.

But a serious problem remains. You may know indeed, and no one can refute you, that, in your 'mental process' you are no whit inferior to these arrogant scientists. But you must be able to demonstrate that, at least to the satisfaction of other lit-crit people, in publications. And publication, remember, is all. Without publication — and rigorous publication at that — you will never know the life-giving exhilaration of MALT, but instead crumble beneath such a teaching load that you will never be heard from again, beyond the wall of the accursed classroom.

If you would avoid this fate, various closely related strategies are open to you, some of which are listed by Professor Roger Shattuck in an article How to Rescue Literature in the New York Review of Books for April 17, 1980 (a copy of which I obtained by occult means). Thus you can try, for example, semiology (or semiotics), 'speech-act theory,' 'reader response theory.'

The basic trick is to find something measurable which has something to do with literature. The trouble here is that there is no technique of measurement which will tell you whether what you have got hold of is literature or not. Never mind. You can do one of two things about that. You can take for granted that certain works belong to literature (because they are generally so thought of, for reasons which need not concern you) and then measure, in those, anything that seems to lend itself to measurement, such as 'acoustic patterns.' Or, more boldly, you can 'eschew value judgments,' affirm that all things written — including comic-strip captions — are the subject of literary criticism, and then apply the same technique.

Some readers may feel that these activities, while droll in themselves, are of little public concern or consequence. They seem to me important as representing tendencies at work within the academic world on both sides of the Atlantic, towards the depression of the role of the teacher, the perversion of the role of the writer, and the general obfuscation of intelligence.

The tintinnabulation of nuclei

NEW YORK — The nuclei of atoms, like bells, ring when struck. The "ringing" of a nucleus, which is caused by striking it with protons, does not produce sound. Instead, the ringing consists of electromagnetic energy radiated in the form of gamma waves.

Physicists at Ohio State University report that they have discovered a new way in which this electromagnetic ringing may yield fundamental knowledge about nuclear structure.

When a bell is rung, its sound consists mainly of one definite note, which has an exact frequency. But the sound also includes many secondary notes, called harmonics, whose frequencies are multiples of the frequency of the dominant note.

Since atomic nuclei are not real bells and since their "ringing" is electromagnetic rather than acoustic, physicists have avoided extending the analogy to real bells. But the Ohio group, headed by Dr. S. Leslie Blatt, has found that nuclei, like real bells, also give off faint harmonic radiation.

The first of these harmonics was detected by an ultrasensitive gamma-ray detector, and the group expects to find higher harmonics as the techniques are refined. A study of these harmonics, they said, is likely to disclose important information about the nature of the "strong force," the fundamental force that holds nuclear particles together.

Toronto

TORONTO (CP) — The Toronto stock market was up sharply in active mid-afternoon trading.

Trading in shares of Union Gas Ltd. and Precambrian Shield Resources Ltd. resumed at the opening after being halted in late trading Wednesday. By 2 p.m. Union Gas class A stock was up ⅜ to $11⅝ and Precambrian Shield gained 70 cents to $5¼.

Trading in Numac Oil and Gas Ltd. resumed at 11 a.m. and by 2 p.m. the stock was down 2½ to $36.

Union Gas said it will buy 10.7 per cent of Numac's shares for $41 million. It will buy 500,000 treasury shares at $41 a share and will buy 500,000 shares held by Allpak Ltd. for the same price.

In a related agreement, Precambrian Shield, in which Numac is a substantial shareholder, will take over management of Union Gas's existing interest in Western Canadian oil, gas and coal.

Trading in shares of Action Traders Inc. resumed after a morning halt and by 2 p.m. the stock was down eight cents to seven cents.

The company said holders of its 8½ per cent subordinated debentures approved an arrangement under which they would receive preference shares of the company.

company reports

ITT

International Telephone and Telegraph Corp. reports record earnings of $346.5 million for the first quarter of the year on record sales of $4.27 billion.

Sales increased 12.2 per cent from the first quarter of 1979 when the world's largest manufacturer of telecommunications equipment earned $210.1 million on sales of $3.81 billion.

Per-share earnings for the quarter were $2.38, up from $1.46 in the first three months last year, the company said.

The first-quarter results included a $13-million tax benefit stemming from the recent enactment of a U.S.-United Kingdom tax treaty.

The largest increase in income in the first quarter came from the consumer products and services division, which registered a gain of $37.4 million from the 1979 quarter.

Quebecor

Quebecor Inc. of Montreal, owner of daily and weekly newspapers, commercial printing plants and other interests, reports its profit after extraordinary items for the six months ended March 31 jumped to $3.03 million, or $1.34 per common share, up from $1.39 million, or 59 cents a share, in the same period a year earlier. Sales rose to $90.4 million from $79.4 million.

Ivaco

Ivaco Ltd. of Marieville, Que., a manufacturer of steel products with 32 plants in Canada and the United States, reports its first-quarter profits rose this year to $10.25 million, or $1.05 per common share, up from $9.45 million, or 97 cents a share, in the first quarter of 1979. Sales rose sharply to $165.4 million, up from $90.7 million.

Torstar

Torstar Corp., publisher of the Toronto Star, had net earnings of $3.8 million or 46 cents a share in the first three months of this year, up $4,000 from the same period a year ago.

Earnings were down from a year ago chiefly because of one-time costs of introducing production changes.

The costs are expected to be recovered during the next three quarters.

Harlequin Enterprises Ltd., 62-per-cent owned by Torstar, reported net profit of $5.03 million for the quarter, up from $3.73 million a year ago.

Dominion

Dominion Stores Ltd., Canada's largest food chain, had the most successful year in its history in the 52 weeks ended March 22, it says in a report to shareholders.

It reported net profit of $27.28 million or $3.18 a share, up from $24.08 million or $2.81 in the previous year.

Sales rose 10.75 per cent to $2.66 billion from $2.4 billion.

Brunswick

Brunswick Mining and Smelting Corp. had net earnings of $17.4 million or 52 cents a share in the first quarter of this year, compared with $14.2 million or 42 cents in the similar 1979 period.

Revenues rose to $77.4 million from $62.1 million.

The company also reported in an interim financial statement that it has invested $20 million in the Beaufort Sea oil and gas exploration program of Dome Petroleum Ltd., and $13.2 million in common shares of Frenswick Holdings Ltd. to maintain its 38.2-per-cent interest in that company.

Toronto doubling floor capacity

TORONTO (CP) — The Toronto Stock Exchange has started a major spending program to double floor capacity and prevent the overloading of facilities as happened in frenzied trading earlier this year.

Stock exchange chairman Hugh Keswick McMahon, vice-president of Pitfield Mackay Ross Ltd. of Toronto, said the exchange is after greater efficiency.

The exchange needs more floor space because it is expanding the options market and developing new areas of business such as financial futures.

Preliminary studies for a new building in Toronto have been carried out, but no final decision can be taken until about 20 stocks are tested on the experimental post, likely this fall, McMahon said.

"The size of the trading floor, for example, depends on the method of trading we adopt. The new equity trading has high priority this year."

Other building options include purchasing land or working with a developer in downtown Toronto.

Stock exchange spending includes $1.2 million for two new computers.

Awards scheme for businessmen

MONTREAL (CP) — Quebec's provincial Chamber of Commerce has borrowed an idea from Hollywood and plans an annual awards presentation similar to the Academy Awards to recognize business achievements.

"Many businessmen are afraid of showing what they are doing, afraid of saying they are making a profit," chamber president Marcel Baril said this week in announcing the awards, to be called Mercuriades.

"We want to have our business people proud of themselves and let people know who they are. It is time the enterprises of Quebec, which are linked so intimately with our everyday life, develop their own heroes."

The first awards presentation has been set for March 6, 1981.

Residents to battle Hydro bulldozers

Residents of the Sunshine Coast are prepared to battle B.C. Hydro bulldozers that will soon be clearing a 400-foot-wide right-of-way for the Cheekye-Dunsmuir power transmission line to Vancouver Island.

The Environment and Land Use Committee of cabinet gave approval in principle Wednesday to the final choice of route.

An unofficial coalition of community and environmental groups has already chosen the battle ground — an old logging road on Texada Island.

Hydro work crews are expected to start widening the Davie Bay Road later this month or early next, making it into an access road for the main right-of-way.

On a rise of land along the Davie Bay Road, the protesters will be waiting.

Carl Rising-Moore of Powell River, spokesman for the group, said today plans call for about 50 protesters to camp across the road.

However, only four or five of them will actually attempt to block the bulldozers.

They expect — in fact they hope — to get arrested.

"We realize what we are doing is blocking a public road and that RCMP can do nothing but arrest us for that.

"But this is our last attempt to try and get the issue into the public eye. We are completely frustrated at this point and don't know what else to to do," Rising-Moore said.

"We don't plan to throw ourselves in front of bulldozers. We don't want anyone to get hurt and we don't see the RCMP as the enemy," he added.

The MLA for the area, Don Lockstead (NDP-Mackenzie), is doubtful the confrontation will do any good.

"We have been the route, explored every conceivable avenue, made representation in every possible manner. This government has not taken any notice."

Lockstead said a recent government decision to proceed with a Vancouver Island natural gas pipeline cancels the need for the $1 billion Cheekye-Dunsmuir project but that won't stop Hydro.

The ELUC approval in principle allows Hydro to seek the necessary permits and approvals from provincial regulatory agencies. When these are obtained, Hydro will start issuing contracts for clearing and construction.

In addition, Hydro must settle with landowners through whose property the right-of-way will pass.

When it is completed, there will be a 400-foot-wide swath cut across the Sechelt Peninsula, Nelson Island and Texada Island. From there, underwater cables will take the twin 500-kilovolt lines across Malaspina Strait and the Strait of Georgia to V.I.

The first electricity from the Cheekye-Dunsmuir project will be delivered to Island consumers in 1983, about the time that gas from the pipeline also is expected to become available.

DND used germs off Island

VANCOUVER (CP) — Destroyers conducting tests off the B.C. coast in the late 1960s used germ — not chemical — agents, Canadian Armed forces spokesman Lt.-Cdr. Dick Pepper said today.

Pepper said a 1967 national defence publication identified the substance used as a "nonpathogenic organism" not harmful to humans.

The substance is Globigii spores, a common hay bacteria.

It is incapable of harming humans and is not infectious, Pepper said.

A dose was used 50 times the maximum that would be expected under enemy attack, he said.

Pepper said there is no association between that test and chemical warfare tests in Winnipeg using the chemical zinc cadmium sulphide.

Manitoba MP Terry Sargeant (NDP — Selkirk-Interlake) said Wednesday chemical tests took place off Vancouver Island involving the escort vessels HMCS St. Croix and HMCS Yukon.

"We don't know yet just how dangerous the substance used was," Sargeant said in a telephone interview from Ottawa.

He said that tests done in the U.S. during the same period using the same chemical — zinc cadmium sulphide — have resulted in a series of recent law suits because of alleged adverse health reactions.

Sargeant's disclosure follows reports that Winnipeg was the site of similar testing in 1953.

"I think we're going to find more and more of this kind of testing went on in this country," he said.

He said a defence department publication from 1967 states the tests were conducted off Vancouver Island by the destroyers HMCS St. Croix and HMCS Yukon.

HMCS St. Croix apparently sprayed a cloud of the substance at the destroyer HMCS Yukon on which a collector was mounted to test the Yukon's defence capabilities against chemical, biological and nuclear attack, Sargeant said.

The publication, he said, says the tests were a success because the chemical did not penetrate the protective system aboard the Yukon.

Modern destroyers are built with defences against radiation, gas attack, and chemical and biological warfare.

Maj. Jeff Haswell, an information officer with the department of defence, said in a telephone interview from Ottawa that the defence department is conducting an exhaustive search of its files from the test and has not yet uncovered any other Canadian tests.

But "it would be like looking for a needle in a haystack," to try to find other examples of tests even if they did occur, he said. "We'll just have to take it one step at a time."

Gillian Willis of the B.C. Drug and Poison Centre in Vancouver said that zinc cadmium sulphide could be potentially lethal in the right doses, and was most dangerous when inhaled as it would have been in the Winnipeg test.

But symptoms of exposure to the chemical would likely occur within four to eight hours after contact, she said, and it is not likely the symptoms would manifest themselves suddenly after so long a period.

Power outage as car sheers off hydro pole

Electric power was lost for three hours in the 1200-block Johnson after a car sheared off a pole and knocked out transformers at 5:17 a.m. today.

Traffic was hampered in the one-way thoroughfare while B.C. Hydro linemen cleared hot wires and restored service.

City police said an eastbound car driven by Larry Haviland, 29, of 3205 Upper Terrace, swerved into a pole at 1257 Johnson and came to rest against a rock wall, causing about $5,000 damage.

Firemen attended because of the live wires and a gasoline spill but there was no fire.

Haviland escaped injury, police said.

Residents air backlog of Inn beefs

Years of grievances against the Olde England Inn on Lampson Street were aired Wednesday night at a public hearing on changes to Esquimalt's zoning bylaw.

But by the end of the meeting the 60 residents who attended seemed to understand that council wanted to make the changes in an effort to gain control over the inn's activities.

After listening to the long list of complaints, Ald. Larry Mann closed the meeting by suggesting a motion to send the proposed bylaw back to council's land, zoning and housing committee for further consideration.

If council amends the proposed bylaw a second public hearing will be held.

Complaints from residents included traffic problems, loss of on-street parking, bus engine fumes and noise interfering with people's enjoyment of their gardens.

Residents worried that legitimizing the inn's operation by making its zoning conform to its uses would permit expansion of the business.

Hostility peaked when the hearing heard from inn owner Rosina Lane who founded the business 30 years ago with her late husband Sam.

She told the meeting the inn had been built, with the municipality's blessing, before most of the houses in the area.

When she spoke about her financial state since her husband's death, someone yelled: "Take your family troubles home."

Another woman claimed the late inn owner refused to donate to a children's project in Esquimalt.

The bylaw was proposed following complaints last year that alleged the inn was using some of the duplexes it owns in the area to lodge overnight guests.

UVic fees decision next week

University of Victoria governors now have a framework on which to set 1980-81 tuition fees with confirmation this week of the university's $41.45 million operating grant.

Students should know following the board's meeting Tuesday how much they will have to pay for courses in the coming session.

The Universities Council of B.C. approved a 12.4 per cent increase in UVic's grant — higher than for any other university in the province.

UVic has recorded a 5.5 per cent rise in enrolment and UVic president Howard Petch says the higher grant still does not meet the cost of inflation.

The grant represents 90 per cent of the university's operating revenue and most of the 10 per cent balance will have to come from student fees.

Finance vice-president Bob McQueen said due to changes in the way the universities council allocates funds for UVic programs in the interior, the effective increase in the grant this year is 11.8 per cent.

And if fees remain unchanged the percentage drops to 10.6, McQueen said.

$25,000 Bastion challenge

By AUDREY JOHNSON

A challenge on behalf of Bastion Theatre has been issued by a wealthy Victoria businessman.

He wants to remain nameless but he is as "substantial" as the terms of the challenge, says Bastion president Clare Copeland.

He is prepared to make a $25,000 contribution to Bastion's fund drive, providing the Victoria community, both business and private sectors, comes forward soon with a matching amount.

Bastion's fund-raising campaign stands at $50,000, less than a third of the way toward its first goal of $165,000. That is the amount required to clear off the deficit, represented by loans accumulated over the 10 years since Bastion became one of Canada's leading professional regional theatres, and from some five previous years.

General manager Eric Macdonald says interest charges on the loans, particularly in view of the current financial situation, compound the problem. He says Bastion would have had a balanced budget over the last five years if it had not been for interest payments on the loan.

Total Bastion fund drive objective over the next three years is $500,000, $300,000 of which will be required for operating capital.

The theatre receives core funding from Canada Council of $165,000 per year and from the B.C. Cultural Fund of $100,000. Municipal grants have been about $50,000 until this year when most applicants received less than anticipated.

For the 1980 season the operating budget, including mainstage, youth tours and theatre school, is projected at $722,000. Total income, earned and grants, is forecast at $637,000. The three-year projection sees the budgeted expenses rising to $850,000 in 1982, with revenue still lagging behind at $755,000.

But this is an inevitable situation for all performing arts organizations. The only way to bring the two totals closer together would be to double the price of tickets, which would shut out a big section of their audiences.

Every professional arts organization in Canada has to rely substantially on government subsidy. In return they must provide high quality performances to the largest possible number of people at the most reasonable cost.

The fact that Canada is in a recession, that governments have been holding the line on grant increases while inflation has sent costs soaring, has brought on a crisis for all the arts. Stress is being laid by government funding officers on the need for arts organizations to improve their fund-raising activities in the private sector.

Bastion's fund-raising co-chairpersons, Maryla Waters and D.C. Field, say the $300,000 in federal and provincial grants, when injected into the local economy, generate more than $1 million of economic activity.

Inflation reason for $2.8M Saanich building permit rise

Inflation is responsible for most of a $2.8 million increase in the total value of building permits issued in Saanich during the first four months of 1980, municipal planner Allan Hopper said today.

The value of new construction increased from $12.2 million in the first four months of 1979 to $15 million during the same period this year.

But the number of actual projects only increased from 370 between January and April of 1979 to 380 in the same period this year.

And the number of single-family homes and duplexes built actually dropped from 197 to 193, while construction costs increased from $9.5 million to $10.5 million.

Apartment-townhouse construction increased from 10 to 42 units.

Permits for other construction projects dropped from 163 in 1979 to 145 projects in 1980.

Heavy guns proposed in traffic accident war

VANCOUVER (CP) — Fines, jail terms and a drastically revised judicial procedure are weapons that can be wielded against bad drivers, a "war on traffic accidents" conference was told Wednesday.

The one-day conference was sponsored by city hall.

Del Delisle of the Motor Vehicle Task Force outlined a list of severe measures the two-year-old study group is considering for recommendation to the attorney-general.

The measures might not reduce accidents, he said, "but it is hoped that we may impress upon the driving public that continued; flagrant, and highly dangerous disrespect for traffic laws and procedures will no longer be tolerated."

The measures include:

— Speeders travelling more than 30 km-h over the posted speed limit "will be required to appear in court, receive a fine and be assigned six points against their driving records;"

— On acquiring the 10th point in a year, a driver will have to go to court "and there, hopefully, receive heavy fines;"

— Any person with 15 points who is convicted receives a mandatory 30-day driving suspension;

— Driving under suspension would bring penalties ranging from impounding vehicles to jails and heavy fines.

Assistant attorney-general Neil McDiarmid, chairman of the task force, said a draft of the new motor vehicle act likely will be presented to the attorney-general within the next few months.

The two-year-old task force, conducted by eight civil servants and Insurance Corp. of B.C. officers, has received 350 submissions, held eight public hearings and had six subcommittees.

McDiarmid told the conference that the Law Reform Commission currently is studying the Criminal Code and is considering bringing regulatory functions under the referee system now being used in some traffic matters.

Although it would be controversial, he said, such matters would be dealt under the "inquisitorial system; it may well be based on the balance of probability rather than beyond a reasonable doubt."

He said there are roughly 500,000 regulatory offences in Canada, all combining to clog a court system that wasn't designed to handle them.

Asked whether civil liberties might not be infringed upon, McDiarmid described a pilot project in North York where a judge sits as the accused reads, for instance, the report of a police officer on a traffic accident.

If the accused agrees with the account, the judge will have a computer find the driver's record, then he will deliver his judgment.

"That is voluntary," McDiarmid said. "We are considering whether we might not make that compulsory and move these offences out of the normal courts."

Earlier, Superintendent Ken Cocke of the Vancouver police traffic division had complained that someone charged with a driving offence today would not reach court until November.

Cocke advocated fines, speeding up the court process to 30 days, jail terms for people driving under suspension, mandatory blood-alcohol testing in hospitals, raising qualifications for drivers' licences and outlawing of radar detection devices.

Dr. David Hunt, an emergency physician and co-ordinator of the paramedic program, called for mandatory blood-alcohol testing on all accidents victims brought into hospital.

Even passengers should be tested so as to remove the onus on medical people to determine who was the driver, he said.

Tillicum centre decision likely Friday

B.C. Supreme Court Justice Henry Hutcheon is expected to make a decision Friday on the Tillicum shopping centre case, Saanich municipal solicitor Chris Nation said today.

Hutcheon heard arguments from developer Cal Investments Ltd.'s lawyer Brian Wallace in Vancouver on Wednesday.

Wallace asked that an injuction granted the Capital Region District several weeks ago be dropped, or changed to make the CRD liable for any damages awarded by the court.

Nation said Hutcheon adjourned the case and will probably rule Friday on the arguments presented by Wallace and CRD lawyer Don Farquhar.

The injunction prevents Saanich from lifting a restrictive covenant allowing the developers to expand the shopping centre from 295,000 square feet to 495,000 square feet.

It also prevents Saanich from issuing any building permits to Cal Investments.

The CRD asked for the injunction after Saanich decided to lift the covenant. The municipality's move was called a breach of faith and a violation of the regional plan by CRD chairman James Campbell.

'Essential' nurses listed

The B.C. Labor Relations Board has been asked by Labor Minister Jack Heinrich to determine what essential nursing services should be provided if government nurses launch full-scale strike action Friday.

Heinrich said he was acting under a section of the Labor Code which authorizes him to request the board to designate facilities, productions and services that it considers essential to life, health or safety.

Heinrich said he recognizes the nurses' right to strike.

"But I've also got an obligation to ensure that those people who are ill for whatever reason it may be, require protection."

Heinrich said he did not want to specify what services he thought the board might designate as essential because he does not want the people who in fact are the recipients of that service to become anxious.

Registered nurses employed by the B.C. government have voted 90.6 per cent to reject an inquiry commissioner's non-binding report.

They have also threatened to increase rotating strikes Friday.

The last strikes were held two days prior to the commissioner's appointment April 15.

Glen Smale, negotiator for the Registered Nurses Association of B.C. and the Registered Psychiatric Nurses Association of B.C. which represent the 2,700 government nurses, would not disclose the extent of strikes planned, but said nurses have nearly exhausted the range of limited job action.

He did say essential services would be maintained, but did not identify which ones, thus leaving it up to the labor board to decide.

The nurses, who work at public and mental health units across the province, are seeking a 39-per-cent wage increase over 27 months, but the report prepared by Mr. Justice Henry Hutcheon of the B.C. Supreme Court offered wage increases totalling 25.6 per cent over two years.

However, the nurses' associations said the report short-changed their members in comparison with the 44-per-cent wage increase over 27 months won recently by 12,500 general hospital nurses.

No new talks have been scheduled before the Friday deadline set by the nurses who currently earn $1,361 a month.

Young's legal costs to CRD

Capital Regional District directors decided Wednesday to pay any legal fees incurred by executive director Dennis Young in his fight against allegations made by Salt Spring Island director Yvette Valcourt.

Valcourt, who was elected director in 1979, has been battling the proposed Ganges sewer project for the past two years.

She has succeeded in persuading the attorney-general's office to order a second RCMP investigation into the validity of a petition in support of the sewers.

Valcourt claims the petition includes at least one forgery.

Board chairman Jim Campbell said Wednesday Valcourt had abused her power by accusing Young of illegally certifying the petition.

He said the whole matter had been explained to Valcourt but she continues to accuse Young.

He said the superintendent of municipalities had examined the whole issue and agreed Young acted correctly.

He described Valcourt's latest accusation as both regrettable and reprehensible.

Strike ends

QUEBEC (CP) — The 470 workers at three local Syndicat de Quebec department stores voted Wednesday to go back to work after a two-week strike. The store employees, affiliated to the Confederation of National Trade Unions, accepted a management pay offer of a 30 per cent increase over a three-year period.

Cuban refugees keep arriving despite orders to stop screening proposal or Carter's suggestion of a controlled ferry operation.

But the statement said: "The question of whether to permit the departure of boats from Florida is a matter for Carter to decide. We shall see how he can do this." Granma also accused the United States of being solely responsible for having "stimulated" the boatlift in the first place.

More than 10,800 Cubans sought asylum at the Peruvian embassy in Havana on Easter weekend. Castro later said that virtually any Cuban who wished to could leave Cuba.

The U.S. has not yet asked Canada to help resettle some of the thousands of Cubans landing on the shores of Florida, an external affairs spokesman said in Ottawa this week.

But a spokesman for the Canadian immigration department said the government would not be too surprised to receive such a request.

Immigration Minister Lloyd Axworthy announced last month Canada would accept up to 300 of those Cubans who flooded the Peruvian embassy in Havana.

However, immigration officials said at the time it is unlikely there are 300 Cubans who want to come to Canada, as most have relatives in the U.S. and had stated a preference for settling in that country.

In related developments:

— U.S. federal health authorities said there was little or no general health danger to the American public from the influx of Cubans, a few of whom have venereal disease and tuberculosis.

— Alarmed business leaders said misconceptions about Cuban refugees threaten to annihilate Key West's tourist-based economy. "You hear that we have leprosy in the streets, that refugees are rioting, that soldiers are here with tanks," complained City Commissioner Richard Heyman.

All that exotic image - and no soul!

By AB KENT

You can teach a computer a lot about physiology but it would still be a lousy lover.

That's an oversimplified but neat way of saying, stop worrying, machines will never take over the world.

Dr. Oliver Selfridge, specialist in artificial intelligence, puts it in a philosophical framework: only man has free will and purpose.

The Boston computer scientist was interviewed at the third biennial conference of the Canadian Society for Computational Studies of Intelligence, being held at the University of Victoria.

This former MIT mathematician who studied under Norbert Wiener, the father of cybernetics, takes a humanist view of computer technology and prefers to think more about the uses of computers than how to build them.

"We still don't know how to handle them very well."

He said one of the great distinguishing features of humankind is that "we live a long time and get such a depth of understanding — of world knowledge — an all-togetherness of human beings."

Computers as they are known today have been around only a few years and fulfil a very limited function in terms of human intelligence.

For example, Selfridge said, people have many purposes.

"We all want lots of things at the same time. People can have conflicting purposes or feelings.

"You might love your mother, but at the same time you could hate her. That's part of the power of human behavior.

"We don't really know how to handle purposes or conflict in artificial intelligence. We don't know how a machine can be made to do that."

But will artificial intelligence take ever more functions away from humans, more than man the conceited animal may wish to relinquish?

Probably not without human purpose. The scientist gets a clue from cybernetics, Greek for control or govern.

"You don't steer a boat without knowing where to go."

Computer technology has made some very useful tools for man — servants, as Selfridge calls them. They can be made to do much of the onerous work of the world, to watch over some of the things an intelligent being does and blow the whistle when an error in routine occurs.

But in the long run, he said, a great deal more will be learned about man himself through teaching computers to perform more human-like tasks.

"We are going to find out a great deal about what makes a person, what humanity is, and that doesn't demean humanity.

"Knowing about something doesn't demean it. Knowing about physiology doesn't spoil love. It could be enriched. Learning about how thinking takes place will help people to think."

A few years ago the applications of artificial intelligence tended to be exaggerated, which lead to uneasiness about the power of machines over man, or at least unrealistic applications.

A lot of tedium can be taken over by electronic slaves, and there are some powerful tools but Selfridge says the magical claims are unjustified.

Since the 1960s AI scientists have developed knowledge engineering, concentrating on getting from experts some of the essential rules of their disciplines or professions.

To illustrate, the computer people would take all the steps required in molecular analysis and program them into an AI computer, tuning it up in consulation with chemists and providing them with a useful tool.

This kind of interface with reality, as Selfridge decribes it, comes slowly. All of computer technology finds that, and it will be a long time before AI is widely used and working for everyone.

AI hasn't yet thought like a person, he said, except in some restricted areas like computers "taught" to play chess. And that can be done two ways, by modelling human reasoning processes, or by using the computer's mathematical skills so that the machine will win every game.

A lot of economic opportunities exist for AI — from grain handling and market analysis to helping doctors diagnose — wherever rules bind processes.

The future will see much emphasis on the learning process, Selfridge predicts. If the processes can be captured there will be practical effects, and the machine can eliminate a lot of toil.

Who said they'll take over the world?

The convention centre show in the McPherson theatre lobby is over now but the next time you get a chance to look at the big Inner Harbor model prepared by Arthur Erickson, check the property to the north of the centre's proposed site at Wharf and Fort.

The design of the convention centre, with its front wall 30 feet above street level on Wharf, has been the source of all the controversy. But a glance at the block of condominiums immediately to the north is a shock.

City council rejected several proposed designs of the building when Hans Hartwig owned the property. When Sam Bawlf acquired it and made some concessions everyone sighed with relief.

He wouldn't foist a Reid centre style of development on the waterfront, would he? The man who saved so many heritage buildings?

If the model is accurate, Bawlf's condos will be massive and overpowering, dwarfing the convention centre next door. His project isn't a 20-storey high rise but it's big enough to shrink all the other buildings in the vicinity. By comparison the convention centre is a light, gossamer little thing sitting unobtrusively on the waterfront.

It's too late to stop it now, but council ought to make sure the next phase of developments on the harbor are more like the Laurel Point Inn, set back from the waterfront and less obtrusive. The height and the density of the present zoning just aren't acceptable.

If a terrible rainstorm, something like last fall's deluge, hits Victoria in the next few years and your basement floods, don't call city hall. Phone your favorite alderman at his Oak Bay address.

The decision by city council to scrap the storm drain reserve fund went through because of the Oak Bay four, aldermen Frank Carson, Ken Sinclair, Bob Wright, and Ron McKenzie, all of whom live behind the Tweed Curtain.

Mayor Bill Tindall went along with the majority, but he'll soon be living on the heights in Rockland, which never sees its storm drains flood because the neighborhood is up on the highest land in the city.

Of course the budget-cutters will tell you they didn't abolish any programs, only made a decision about how to pay for some public works. But don't hold your breath waiting for council next year — an election year and probably even tougher times economically than 1980 — to jack up taxes by four or five mills to make up for this year's cut and provide an equivalent amount for 1981.

How much did council save by the cut? Less than two mills on the mill rate, about $20 or $25 on your property taxes this year. Would you rather have money in the pocket or worry about the threat of flooding when the next worst storm of the quarter century hits?

Answers, please, to the mayor and aldermen Carson, Sinclair, McKenzie and Wright.

While we Canadians fool around with optional energy-saving measures and use up gasoline and heating oil at laughably low prices, some of our neighbors are getting serious about the crunch.

In Washington state and Seattle, public thinking and government policy are miles ahead. The city and state governments have got tough.

A bill which would ban electric heating in new houses — 90 per cent of new homes built there in 1979 are heated electrically — unless power use is low and strict conservation is observed seems likely to pass the state senate.

It would add about $1,200 to the price of a house but save $5,000 on heating bills over the life of the mortgage. In total, the saving is estimated at 277 megawatts, enough to run Boeing and supply all the state's irrigated farmland with power.

Or it could provide the planned Northern Tier pipeline with the power necessary to run all its pumping stations.

As electric rates here just jumped seven per cent, the provincial government might profitably look to Washington for a lesson.

Seattle has also come up with a good idea to alleviate downtown traffic congestion. Mayor Charles Royer wants to see every downtown lot reserve a few spaces for vans and car poolers as incentive to those who double up in vehicles and ease the traffic congestion.

All grabbed up in three years?

Industrial park land selling

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

Land in the Royal Oak industrial park is selling so quickly Saanich could be in another controversial hunt for industrial space in three years, developer Art Kool said Wednesday.

Municipal planner Allan Hopper confirmed the rapid sales and said Kool's prediction is realistic.

Kool said 15 acres of the 56-acre industrial park have already been sold.

"In three years it may be full. Maybe it will last 10 years — I hope to God it does," said Kool.

He is a member of the six-person Royal Oak advisory design panel created by Saanich council last summer to process industrial park applications. He owns 32 acres next to the park.

The park was strongly opposed by Royal Oak community groups, but passed by a 5-4 vote last October. A proposal for a larger industrial site had been rejected 14 months earlier.

Council thought land would sell at the rate of five acres a year, filling the municipality's industrial needs for the next 10 years, according to Kool.

Only two applications to build have been made, but Hopper expects more after the municipality starts installing services in June.

Industrialists are waiting to see if Saanich is serious before committing themselves, he thinks.

Kool said the current spurt of land buying may be the release of pent-up pressure created by the shortage of industrial land in the municipality in the past.

But he said the high quality of the light industrial park may attract a lot more businesses sooner than the municipality bargained for.

He said standards enforced by the design panel are tough and it has the last word in architectural design and landscaping.

An esthetic exterior and screening with plenty of shrubs are two firm rules, Kool said.

Only one application, Gray Beverage Co., has been officially approved. The bottle manufacturing company is set to start construction on its 100,000-square-foot building this month.

Another applicant, Williams Moving and Storage, will appear before the design panel next week.

Applications passed by the panel are recommended to council for final approval.

About six businesses, including a fishing tackle manufacturer and another moving firm, have substantial options on property.

Meanwhile, design panel member Bob Richards is concerned about residents living inside the industrial zone.

He said they will be faced with a large increase in taxes unless council makes special provision for them.

Planner Hopper said residents will be required to pay a specified area tax in addition to regular taxes. The specified area tax works out to between $8,000 and $9,000 an acre.

But he said most residents still living inside the industrial zone have sold or agreed to sell their homes.

GALLOPING GERANIUM must be just a freak of nature, says Welli Cliffe who's been growing the five-foot monster for the last year. He and his wife Levina, above, don't know why the plant has taken off. It hasn't received any special treatment. "It's like a tree," he says. The geranium is growing in an enclosed balcony on the north side of their apartment at 302-305 Michigan.

Gordon's Towing today made a major concession in its battle with angry motorists with a promise to hire more staff to supervise towaways.

The company's proposal is in response to the city's threat to eliminate towaways from commercial parking lots and to replace them with a ticketing system run by the commissionaires.

Gordon's general manager Gerald Hartwig said today the company would hire its own supervisors to ticket overparked vehicles if the city gives permission.

No vehicle would be towed away from a parking lot without the permission of the supervisor. He would leave a special ticket on the windshield, giving the driver a 15-minute grace period.

At the same time Hartwig said that because the new scheme will increase his company's operating expenses and reduce its revenue, Gordon's wants an increase in the towaway rates from $16 to $24.

"The proposed new towing rate will be still on the lowest scale compared to towing charges in other Canadian or American cities," Hartwig said.

He also gave aldermen a letter from Walter Jackson, manager of Robbins Parking Service Ltd., which operates more than 100 parking lots in Victoria. The letter objected to the city's plan to police lots with commissionaires empowered to issue tickets only and not to order towaways.

"We receive very few complaints — less than two per month. We are aware of only two complaints lodged with the city within the last year."

"The news media indicate there are 'numerous complaints' but cannot document them. Therefore, the desire to police parking lots by the city seems only to be stimulated by the news media for some obscure reason.

"Regulations legislated on this basis will generate further and never-ending problems."

Jackson said any new scheme must allow towaways.

Colonist managing editor to retire

Fred C. Barnes, managing editor of The Daily Colonist, will retire May 31 after 35 years with the paper.

Barnes, managing editor for almost 29 years, said his immediate plans include golf, fishing and going to the movies.

Publisher R.J. Bower, in an announcement to Colonist staff, said the retirement marks the conclusion of a brilliant newspaper career.

Barnes has been a newspaperman for 43 years.

Williams considers shooting inquiry

Attorney-General Allan Williams is looking into a request by a Vancouver lawyer for a public inquiry into a 1978 Saanich shooting that wounded a police officer and an escaper.

But Williams today refused comment on the written submission he received from lawyer Craig Paterson.

Paterson said in the document that escaper Thomas Lackey told him from his hospital bed hours after the shooting he had been deliberately shot in the head by a policeman after he had surrendered.

Meanwhile, Saanich police board has given full support to Chief Robert Peterson and the officers involved in the incident.

The board supports a statement by Peterson clearing the department of any wrongdoing.

Peterson's statement was in response to a recent publication in the Times of the board's refusal to release the gunshot report required under the firearms regulations of the Police Act in cases where there are injuries or deaths.

The report, made to police board charman Mayor Mel Couvelier last Feb. 8, has still not been made public.

In his statement, Peterson explains the details surrounding the shooting.

"It should be obvious from the foregoing that the comments and opinions attributed to me in the recent Times article are outright fabrications or distortions, and I categorically refute them," he says.

Peterson also says he is concerned the article might "reopen an issue that should have been put to rest, in terms of public speculation, upon the conviction of Lackey for the attempted murder of Sergeant Hillcoat."

Allegations of deliberate shooting were made by defence counsel David Gibbons during Lackey's trial last December in which Lackey was convicted of a series of crimes including the attempted murder of Sgt. William Hillcoat in the Nov. 8, 1978 shoot-out at McKenzie and Cedar Hill Cross Road.

Lacky was sentenced to 18 years in prison and is now at the regional psychiatric centre near Abbotsford undergoing treatment for injuries received in the gun battle.

Peterson said a three-hour debriefing session Feb. 7, 1980, exonerated Hillcoat and Constable Robert Love of any wrongdoing.

Rhonda's accident puts her in world class

A Victoria mother who watched her daughter grow through teething, toddling, ballet and gymnastics, travelled recently to Lowell in Massachusettes to see her finish third in the Women's World Powerlifting Championships.

Somehow, even in the modern world, it seems a little odd for an attractive girl to be transformed quite suddenly into a powerlifter. But Ruth Peterson doesn't mind. She's quite philosophical about it, really.

"Whatever turns you on," she says with a shrug as daughter Rhonda sits happily clutching her trophies at the family home on Stanley Avenue.

"I worry sometimes about all the great weights they lift and the strain and effort they put into it," Mrs. Peterson says. "But it seems they can do it all without injuring themselves. And as long as it makes her happy, it doesn't really bother me."

"I had trouble making the weight for the 56 kilogram (123 pound) class and had to dehydrate myself for 48 hours which left me lacking in strength," she explains.

Still, Rhonda lifted 110 kilograms (245 pounds) in the squat, 60 (135) in the bench and 127.5 (285) in the deadlift to finish third behind American champion Sue Ann Elwyn of Aston, Mass., and a mere five pounds behind the second-place finisher.

Lifters from 10 countries competed in the first world championships for women and, though she's proud of her bronze medal, Rhonda Peterson is sorry she didn't enter the 60 kilogram (132 pounds) class instead.

"I compete better at around 126 pounds and have lifted far more than I did at the world meet," she points out.

Before going to Lowell, the best she had lifted in the squat, for example, was 280 pounds. Her best in the bench was 155 and in the deadlift, 325. That's a combined total of 760 pounds compared with a mere 665 she lifted in taking the bronze medal.

And on April 5, Rhonda broke the Canadian record of 635 pounds that she had set in December by lifting a total of 715 pounds for the three events while winning the Canadian women's title in Belle River, Ontario. She was so impressive in that win (the second-place woman lifted only a total of 600 pounds) that she carried off the Murray Grondin Open Trophy as best lifter in any category at the championships!

Even her chosen trade and her entry into the weird world of powerlifting are somewhat unusual for the girl who at 14 won an Ontario high school gymnastics title while her family was based at CFB Trenton.

After leaving school and working here for a while as a goldsmith, Rhonda decided she needed a change and a year ago she joined Canada's Armed Forces. She has most recently been based at CFB Summerside in northern Prince Edward Island and, when this present leave at home ends, will head to CFB Trenton, 100 miles east of Toronto.

Rhonda is an air frame technician, which she says is a "glorified grease monkey."

"I'm an aircraft mechanic but I don't work on engines," she explains. "It's more hydraulics involving controls and landing gear."

And she got into powerlifting quite by accident.

"I twisted my ankle running and couldn't do anything for a while," she says. "I asked a guy in the gym if he'd show me some exercises to strengthen my leg again. He was a power lifter and I worked out with him. I never went back to running or gymnastics."

That was only seven months ago and, coached by Jimmy Moir, the Canadian 148-pound champion and world titleholder, Rhonda since then has captured the national title and finished third in the world. Not bad for a girl who a year ago didn't know what powerlifting was!

What is it, you ask?

Well, as Rhonda says, it's nothing like Olympic weightlifting in which they do the snatch, clean and the clean-and-jerk and must lift the weights above their heads. The squat, bench and deadlift are all done with straight lifts from the floor bringing the weights either to the waist or shoulders.

"Olympic lifting is more acrobatics and strength and powerlifting is just what it says — straight power," Rhonda explains.

But what could a girl possibly get out of a sport like powerlifting?

"It gives me a sense of achievement and lots of emotional and physical discipline," she says simply. "Every time you reach a new plateau in weights, you are rewarded.

"Why, just this week down at the "Y" I did my first 300-pound squat and I was on Cloud 9 for a couple of days..."

W. Germany joins boycott

DUSSELDORF (AP) — The West German Olympic Committee voted by a strong margin today to follow U.S. President Jimmy Carter's Olympic boycott initiative and keep its team home from the Moscow Summer Games.

By a vote of 59-40, the National Olympic Committee accepted a boycott under "the current political conditions," committee President Willi Daume announced.

The decision is expected to have wide repercussions in encouraging other teams to boycott the games.

The vote came after an emotional four-hour debate in a hotel ballroom in this Rhineland city and climaxed months of controversy in West Germany over the U.S. proposal to boycott the Games because of the Soviet military action in Afghanistan.

Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and the West German Parliament last month had recommended that the Olympic Committee boycott because the Soviet action in Afghanistan violated International Olympic Committee rules on conduct by Olympic host nations.

"Ladies and gentlemen, we have made a democratic decision," Daume told the audience after announcing the vote count. "We must carry it out together, we must live with it together.

"This meeting is adjourned."

Daume also said the National Olympic Committee was holding open the option of reconsidering the boycott if political conditions warrant it, but he didn't specifically mention any deadline.

Olympic committees must inform the Soviets by May 24 whether they intend to send a team to Moscow.

Meanwhile, in Moscow, the deputy chief of the Moscow Olympic Organizing Committee said West Germany's decision to boycott the Games "will have no effect at all on our holding of them."

Vitaly G. Smirnov told The Associated Press the committee was disappointed and that "for me, there is no doubt that the decision wasmade under government pressure."

The debate took place before about 500 sports officials, journalists and spectators. West German television broadcast all the proceedings live on the Ascension Day national holiday.

Daume opened the debate with a rambling plea against boycotting the games, saying that international sports relations could be disrupted and that the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics could be torpedoed by the Soviet bloc in retaliation.

Willi Weyer, president of the West German Sports Federation, then outlined arguments in favor of a boycott, stressing West Germany's reliance on the United States for the security of West Berlpn.

Despite an outburst by an unidentified spectator just before the vote, apparently urging a boycott, the audience and delegates in the packed ballroom reacted to the vote without clapping or otherwise expressing their feelings.

However, the debate itself was often interupted by clapping or booing.

Commenting on the vote, Weyer said: "We will now have to do something for the athletes. There are plans in the drawer."

Puffing on his cigar, the husky chief of West Germany's amateur sports acknowledged that his country's sports relations with neighboring East Germany could possibly suffer consequences.

"But there has not been any direct threat of this up to now," Weyer said.

Daume, an International Olympic Committee member, said: "We battled as well as we could, we could not have done more. I expected this decision.

"The National Olympic Committee will have to learn to live with this decision."

Daume said it was not yet been decided whether he, as an IOC member, will attend the Games.

West Germany's top gymnast, Eberhard Gienger, was visibly saddened by the boycott vote.

"We are disappointed not to be allowed to travel to Moscow," he said. "We bow to the majority decision."

"I personally plan to keep on competing but my studies will take precedence now."

Flyers plan to hit

PHILADELPHIA (CP) — Stung by New York Islanders in the opening game of their Stanley Cup final series, Philadelphia Flyers are planning a more physical game tonight.

Coach Pat Quinn said his Flyers have to get back to their familiar style of play.

"We did not win where we normally win," he said Wednesday after a team workout at the Spectrum. "We didn't win any battles in the corners.

"Remembering their first goal, they had three whacks at it before it went in."

That goal came off the stick of Mike Bossy and was one of three power-play goals the Islanders scored on their way to a 4-3 overtime victory. They lead the best-of-seven series, 1-0.

"Certainly we didn't do a very good job on the penalties, on the penalty killing," Quinn said. He said he wants to stress basics, because simple things will mean the difference in the series.

"We've won games by being a team that will make a takeout rather than someone who skates by."

Adanacs, Bellies win

By Canadian Press

Coquitlam's Mike Reelie scored three goals to lead the Adanacs to a 12-10 Western Lacrosse Association win over Vancouver Burrards in one of two games Wednesday night.

In Nanaimo, Dave Durante fired four goals to lead New Westminster Salmonbellies to a 13-10 victory over the Timbermen.

Mark Valastin, Kevin Parsons and Tim Kelly each had two goals for Coquitlam, while Mat Aitken, Gord Quilty and Dan Wilson added singles.

In Nanaimo, Wayne Goss added three goals for the 'Bellies while Mark Tuura tallied twice. Singles were added by Bob Tasker, Ivan Tuura, Gilles Bezeau and Ted Barangai.

Wayne Reeve and Doug Angrove each scored three times for the Timbermen while Brian Evans had two goals and two assists, boosting his career assists total to 500. Ron MacNeil and Bob Avender each scored once.

Kareem sparkles despite injury

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It takes more than an ankle injury to stop Kareem Abdul-Jabbar.

Los Angeles' brilliant 7-foot-2 centre hurt his left ankle during the third quarter Wednesday night but came back to score 14 of his 40 points in the final period as the Lakers held off a Philadelphia rally and beat the 76ers 108-103.

That gave Los Angeles a 3-2 lead in the best-of-seven National Basketball Association championship.

"It's a sprain, possibly a fracture," Dr. Ronert Kerlan said before escorting Abdul-Jabbar to a nearby hospital. "We taped it heavily while he was out.

"He was in a good deal of pain but he said he was ready to go. He showed extreme courage."

Abdul-Jabbar's three-point play with 33 seconds left in the game snapped a 103-103 tie and enabled the Lakers to once again gain the series advantage.

All Abdul-Jabbar would say as he left for the hospital, walking with the aid of a crutch, was: "It really hurts, but I felt I had to come back."

Abdul-Jabbar left the game midway through the third quarter, but while he was out the Lakers stretched their lead from two points to eight.

"I was afraid we'd either crumble or the guys would play their hearts out," said Lakers' coach Paul Westhead. "Fortunately, the second thing happened."

Julius Erving, who led the Sixers with 36 points, including 16 in the final period, also saw that time as being crucial.

"The difference was our inability to take control when Kareem was out," said Erving. "They gambled and scrambled, and it paid off."

Los Angeles can wrap up its first title since 1972 by winning in Philadelphia on Friday night.

Lions sign backs

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Lions of the Canadian Football League have added three defensive backs to their training camp roster with the announcement Wednesday of the signing of two imports and a Canadian.

The imports are Tom Douglas and Mitchell Elliott, both 22, and Kevin Aver, 24, a 1975 nominee for the Hec Creighton award as the outstanding college football player in Canada.

Elliott, five feet, 10 inches and 170 pounds from William Penn College, is the only camp newcomer of the three. The six-foot, 190-pound Douglas from Delaware State is a free agent who played one exhibition game last year.

Rains cause problems

FORT WORTH, Tex. (AP) — Heavy rains forced postponement today of first-round play in the $300,000 Colonial National golf tournament.

Single rounds now are scheduled for Friday and Saturday. There was no immediate decision on whether a double round of 36 holes will be scheduled for Sunday.

Weather, television commitments and the National Basketball Association playoffs all play a part in the late-round scheduling for the tournament.

Ex-pros help boost Allomatics' hopes

The demise of the professional Western Canada Major Men's Fastball League worked out well for Saskatoon Allomatic A's.

Confronted with several vacancies after the departure of several players with the Saskatchewan champions last year, sponsor-manager Don Funk was quick to take collar some of the available talent. As a result, the A's are again being touted as the team to beat in Saskatchewan.

The effects of the rebuilding may be assessed in Royal Athletic Park Friday and Saturday when Funk, a former Victoria resident, brings Saskatoon into town to play the defending B.C. champions in the first of Victoria Budgets' 1980 "Super Series."

Santa Rosa, Calif., Springfield, Mo., Oxnard, Calif., defending U.S. champion Midland, Mich., 1980 Canadian champion St. Catharines, Pheonix, Portland Ray Bristowe and Decatur, Ill., are other teams whose visits provide Victoria fans with an opportunity to view some of North America's top-rated men's fastball squads.

One of Allomatics' losses was pitcher Rob Guenter, now with Budgets. Other players left to form a rival team in Saskatchewan.

Despite Guenter's departure, Allomatics are solid in pitching with the return of Gene McWillie and the acquisition of Don Bates and Steve Knudsen, formerly with Regina in the WCMFL.

Returnees include first baseman Wayne Walker, Pat Mostoway, Les Howey, Larry Pavlov, Jerry Kooey and Shane Weir.

Budgets, co-leaders in the tough Northwest League, and Allomatics launch their series at 7 p.m. Friday and wind up the four-game stand with a Saturday night twin-bill.

Lorna starts final round with win

SEATTLE — Lorna Pollock of Victoria chalked up her first victory after placing eighth in a field of 64 of North America's top women bowlers to qualify for match play in the Seattle "Queen of the Lanes" tenpin tournament Wednesday.

She beat her first opponent 744-715 after rolling 1,562 in the eight qualifying games.

The double-loss elimination match play contest was scheduled to continue today.

One-hitter by Richdale

Labatts, powered by a solid pitching performance from Bob Richdale, blanked Seaspray Properties 3-0 in a Stuffy McGinnis Men's Softball League game Wednesday night at Central Park.

Richdale yielded only a fifth-inning single to Rick Robertson, struck out four batters and gave up three walks while recording his second straight shutout.

Labatts managed only two hits off losing-pitcher Jim Bowden but Seasprays contributed to their own downfall with five errors.

Joe Underwood scored two of the runs for Labatts, including what proved to be the winning tally in the third inning. In the third, he drew a walk, advanced to second on a fielder's choice, gained third on an error and scored on a bases loaded walk issued to Barry Underwood.

Underwood and Richdale both scored in the seventh on errors.

At Heywood Avenue Park, Ingraham Roadway Inn edged Victoria Athletics 4-3 in Heywood Men's League action.

Bob Palm combined with Dave Peleshete to pitch a four-hitter for Ingraham. Palm and Frank Scott came up with home runs to aid the cause.

In the Macdonald Men's League, Mayfair Insurance tripped Coast Projects 5-4 while the Saints topped Mega Power 11-4 at Macdonald Park.

New York-New York defeated Vidalin Construction 5-4 and Strathcona Stingers mauled Victoria Athletics 13-5 in Victoria-Saanich Senior Women's League play at Hyacinth Park.

Nancy McLaughlin drew a walk, stole second and scored on a single by Denise Cormier to give New York-New York the win. Gail Salter led Vidalin with two hits in four trips.

Two sisters — Christine and Della Smith — supplied some muscle for Stingers.

Christine doubled and singled to drive in three runs while Della singled and tripled in three trips. Dianne Hale hit two singles and a triple for Athletics.

Whitecaps top Fury

By The Canadian Press

North American Soccer League fans got their money's worth Wednesday night as two games needed extra play to decide their outcomes.

In Philadelphia, the defending NASL champion Vancouver Whitecaps went into two periods of overtime with the Fury before picking up a 1-0 victory to move into second place in the Western Division of the National Conference.

And a small Minnesota crowd witnessed a shootout after regulation play that lifted the home town Kicks to a 2-1 win over Portland Timbers.

The Whitecaps ended their long struggle with Philadelphia at 3:04 of the second overtime period when Steve Kember scored his first goal of the season.

Off to a slow start this year, the Whitecaps moved to within one game of a .500 season at 4-5 while Philadelphia fell to 1-7.

Twice in the game, Vancouver thought they had ended the long scoreless tie before they actually did.

After 33 minutes of play in the second half the Whitecaps scored only to have the goal called back because of offsides. And about a minute before midfielder Kember scored the winning goal in overtime, another Vancouver goal was disallowed because it was handled.

Czechs meet all-stars

Ruzomberok, a club team from Czechoslovakia, will be among three visiting squads taking part in a senior women's basketball tournament starting Friday at McKinnon Gymnasium.

Kirby's of Vancouver, Seattle All-Stars and Vancouver Island All-Stars will also take part in the tourney.

The Czechoslovakian Cup champions meet Island in the opening game Friday at 7 p.m. while Kirby's and Seattle square off at 9.

Merchants drub Quadra

Victoria Merchants of the Pacific Coast Junior Baseball League trampled Quadra Warehouse of the Victoria Cosmopolitan Senior League 12-2 in an exhibition game Wednesday at Lambrick Park.

The loss will count against Quadra in league standings.

Doug Bull scattered five hits and struck out five batters while pitching the victory and Bob Godfrey contributed a home run to the offence.

Lions down mixed side

EAST LONDON, South Africa (Reuter) — A steady performance against their first-ever multi-racial opponents in South Africa gave the British Lions Rugby Union team a 28-6 victory Wednesday over a South African Rugby Association club.

The SARA team, normally an all-black squad known as the Leopards, was strengthened by eight white players and battled hard against the Lions.

The visitors won by three tries — two by captain Derek Quinnell — two conversions, three penalties and a dropped goal to two penalties.

The game, played before a mixed crowd of 10,000 was the first of five the Lions will have against multi-racial opposition during their 18-match visit.

Mt. Doug top qualifier

Mt. Douglas headed the "A" list after the final day of qualifications at Centennial Stadium for the Greater Victoria high school track and field championships on Wednesday.

The meet is scheduled to start at 11:30 Friday at the same site.

Mt. Doug managed to qualify 51 "A" class athletes, who earn more points for their teams with high placings in the finals than "B" class competitors.

St. Michael's University School led in over-all qualifiers with 67 — 34 "A" and 33 "B" — while Mt. Douglas finished with 65 over-all.

Defending-champion Claremont, which has held the title for the past three years, will enter 55 athletes, including 32 "A" qualifiers.

SMU has qualfied 48 boys over-all compared to 34 for Mt. Doug and 26 for Claremont. Mt. Douglas placed 31 girls, Mt. Doug has 29 and SMU 19.

Gareau handed medal after ceremonial trot

BOSTON (AP) — Three weeks and two days after the race, Jacqueline Gareau of Montreal trotted symbolically across the Boston Marathon finish line Wednesday to receive the first-place women's medal.

Gareau apparently had finished second on the day of the race, April 21, but Rosie Ruiz, the first woman across the line, was later disqualified.

"It's an exciting day for me," Gareau said. "I will remember it all my life."

Codex to challenge Derby champ

BALTIMORE (AP) — Codex, a colt whose sparkling wins in the Santa Anita and Hollywood Derbies fell under the shadow of Genuine Risk's Kentucky Derby triumph, will challenge the glamor girl of racing Saturday in the $200,000-added Preakness at Pimlico.

Codex was considered by many people to be the top three-year-old before the Derby. But he stayed home in California while Genuine Risk became the second filly and the first in 65 years to win the 1¼-mile Derby. Saturday she will try to become the fifth filly to win the Preakness and the first since Nellie Morse won it in 1924 when the race was 1⅛-miles. Now it is 1 3-16 miles.

In the Derby, Genuine Risk beat 10 male rivals. She could meet as many as eight in the Preakness, with her chief rivals, besides Codex, expected to be Jaklin Klugman, who was third in the Kentucky Derby, and Colonel Moran, an impressive winner of the Withers Stakes last Saturday at Aqueduct.

Other probables were Blue Ensign, Bing, Samoyed, Knight Landing and Lucky Pluck.

The decision to run Codex in the Preakness wasn't made until the Tuesday after the Derby in a meeting between John Nerud, president-general manager of Tartan Stable and trainer Wayne Lukas.

Lukas was in the winner's circle after Codex won the Hollywood Derby when someone said:

"Your horse is not in the Kentucky Derby. How do you feel about it?"

"It hit me lot a ton of bricks," Lucas said.

Splendid girl sets record

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Splendid Girl set a world record Wednesday with a time of 1:19 3-5 for seven furlongs in the $54,650 Silver Spoon Handicap at Hollywood Park.

The previous world record of 1:19 4-5 was set by Triple Bend in 1972 at Hollywood Park.

Bid must carry big weight load

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Trainer Bud Delp says Spectacular Bid, who could become thoroughbred racing's all-time money winner in the next six weeks, will be entered in the $200,000-added Mervyn LeRoy Handicap at Hollywood Park on Sunday.

"We're in," Delp said Wednesday after a telephone conversation with Bid's owner Harry Meyerhoff in Maryland.

In the 1 1-16 mile event Sunday for three-year-olds and up, Spectacular Bid will have to carry the most weight of his career, 132 pounds, giving away 10 to 21 pounds to a field that may include some previous stakes winners.

"It's a lot of weight, but we've got an awful lot of horse," Delp said. "We're worried about what he will have to carry later if he wins this race, but we have decided to take them one at a time from here on."

Spectacular Bid, winner of the 1979 Kentucky Derby and Preakness, has career earnings of $2,089,418 and is only $304,000 behind the record set last year by Affirmed. Delp had previously said he expects Bid to run in the $300,000 Californian at Hollywood Park on June 8 and also in the $400,000 Hollywood Gold Cup on June 22.

Walther keeps on battling but Speedway still winning

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — There has always been an uneasy peace between David (Salt) Walther and the Indianapolis Motor Speedway.

This mecca of auto racing hasn't been the luckiest place for the son of George Walther, a wealthy Dayton, Ohio, industrialist.

The younger Walther, who drives for his father, maybe should have got a hint that his relationship with the Speedway would be a rocky one when officials first told him to get more experience and come back next year.

He took their advice and made the race in 1972, but finished last when his engine died on the first lap.

The next year was a disaster, with Walther the central figure in a wild, flaming crash at the start of the race. He lost the tips of the fingers on his left hand and spent months recovering from severe burns.

But he was back in 1974, finishing 17th and shaking off some of the pampered playboy image that had tarnished his reputation.

"I guess I am a playboy," says Walther, who now makes his home in Beverly Hills, Calif. "But, I don't see why I shouldn't be.

"I'm not hurting anybody. I'm single, I don't take a cent from my dad and I enjoy the ladies. It has nothing to do with the way I drive."

Walther, 32, is a body builder, who credits his physical regimen with saving his life in the 1973 crash.

"I'm sure that's the only thing that saved me," he said. "I was burned very badly and I wound up losing over 100 pounds, but I didn't even know how bad off I was.

"My dad would say, 'Hey, you're looking great,' and I figured I was coming along just fine. But they don't have mirrors in a burn unit. If I had seen myself, I'd probably have scared myself to death."

His best finish at Indy has been a ninth-place showing in the rain-shortened 1976 race. Walther is hoping for better things this year. But, as usual, nothing is easy at Indy.

Jan Sneva, the younger brother of Indy veterans Tom and Jerry Sneva, bought a ride in Walther's backup car for $25,000 and a promise that Tom would help set up both Dayton-Walther cars for the race.

But, during Sneva's driving test — which he started Tuesday in Walther's car — he lost control and crashed into the wall in turn two. The driver was unhurt, but the car's chassis was broken.

"It's a $100,000 wipeout," Walther said. "And that was my favorite car. Now I have to drive the other one."

He was in the back-up car, a Cosworth-powered Penske racer, bright and early Wednesday, getting it ready for the final weekend of qualifying. He quickly became the first non-qualified driver this week to get above 180 miles an hour, hitting a top lap of 180.180 m.p.h.

Sneva had put the car into the lineup for the May 25 race during time trials last Saturday, averaging 186.606 m.p.h. That gave him a spot on the fifth row of the 11-row field. But, now that position may be lost.

The machine is what qualifies for the 33-car field at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway. So, a team can change drivers, although he would have to start at the rear of the field. But they cannot change cars without requalifying.

Ironically, the ride in Sneva's backup car had just been given to veteran Vern Schuppan who had come to the Speedway last week looking for a car to drive.

Now it appears likely that Sneva will replace Shuppan at the wheel of the McLaren-Cosworth — which made its first appearance on the track Wednesday — and will have to qualify it sometime during the final weekend of time trials.

Arsenal a tough-luck loser

BRUSSELS (CP) — Arsenal of London dominated the match but it was Valencia of Spain that took the European Cup Winners Cup home Wednesday.

"We did not deserve to lose," Terry Neill, Arsenal manager, said after the British club lost 5-4 on penalties to the Spaniards.

The teams played 90 minutes without scoring and a 30-minute overtime also could not produce a winner, despite Arsenal's clear edge in territorial play.

The match had to be decided by penalty kicks but even this went into extra time. Five shots at goal are normally taken to decide the outcome but each side missed a penalty, Mario Kempes for Valencia and Liam Brady for Arsenal. So, at 4-4, another five shots each were necessary, with the prospect for each penalty shooter that if he missed the competition ended instantly.

Arias scored for Valencia on his extra penalty shot and, when Graham Rix had his shot for Arsenal stopped by goalkeeper Carlos Pereira, the game was over. It went into the record books as a 1-0 win for Valencia.

When the Valencia captain, Saura, received the trophy, 158 minutes had ticked away since the opening kickoff. Goalkeeper Pereira was mobbed by his team-mates and, along with the trophy, carried shoulder-high around the stadium to the delight of Spanish supporters in the crowd of 40,000.

"It was a very hard game — physically demanding for both teams," said Valencia coach Alfredo Di Stefano. "It was mainly a match between two dominating defences, which explained why it ended without a goal."

The loss was the second bitter pill in five days for Arsenal, the Londoners having dropped the English Football Association Cup final 1-0 to Second Division club West Ham United last Saturday.

Arsenal, playing its 68th game of the season, looked tired in the early going but Valencia's early mastery faded midway through the first half. The closest the teams came to a goal before halftime was a header by Stapleton which beat Pereira but was cleared from under the bar by Jose Carrete.

Burden signs series of Stampeder pacts

CALGARY (CP) — Calgary Stampeders of the Canadian Football League have signed running back Willie Burden, a six-year veteran with the Canadian Football League team, and rookie defensive back Kevin Hunt.

The club announced that Burden, 1975 Schenley Award winner as the most outstanding player in the CFL, has agreed to a series of three one-year contracts.

Hunt, six feet and 180 pounds, was on a five-day trial with the Stampeders last year following his release by Atlanta Falcons of the National Football League. In his brief stay, Hunt impressed the Calgary coaching staff enough to warrant a tryout contract for 1980.

Thunderbird event at weekend

Scouts from the Vancouver Whitecaps will be keeping an eye out for talent when the first annual Thunderbird Classic Soccer tournament is played at Victoria High School Saturday, Sunday and Monday.

And there should be plenty of talent for them and the fans to see as eight men's and eight women's teams battle for top honors in the mainly native Indian competition.

As well as hosts Victoria T-Birds, the squads in the men's event will include Oak Bay Allumni, Saanich Braves, Duncan United, Tillicum Haus from Nanaimo, Alert Bay Reds, Chehalis Golden Eagles and Little Pine, all the way from Saskatchewan.

Non-Indian sides such as University of Victoria Vikettes, Victoria Strikers, Victoria Selects and Nanaimo Selects will play in the women's tourney along with hosts Victoria T-Birds, Scowlitz Roadrunners, Alert Bay Thunderettes and Duncan Totems.

All tourney games will be played at the Vic High and Central Junior High School fields with the women's final (at 1 p.m.) and the men's final (at 3 p.m.) both at Vic High on Monday.

Other festivities planned include the opening ceremonies at 1 p.m. Saturday when the Hunt Family Dance Group will perform traditional Kwakiutl dances, a banquet, dance and cabaret Sunday night and an old-timers game Monday afternoon.

Griffith softball tourney revived

Seven teams from the Victoria-Saanich Senior Women's Softball League and two visiting squads — Stockers North Americans of Victoria and Nanaimo — will compete in the revived Billy Griffith tournament which starts Saturday at Hyacinth Park.

The teams have been drawn into two zones for preliminary round-robin play.

Zone II teams are Nanaimo, Tillicum Shoppers Drug Mart, Victoria Athletic and Island Dryco Breakers.

Games are scheduled at 11 a.m., 1, 3 and 5 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

The semi-finals between the top two teams in each zone will be played at 1 p.m. Monday and the final is slated for 3 p.m.

New Angel instant hit with display of power

By The Canadian Press

Dave Skaggs has his work cut out for him during the rest of the American League baseball season.

Skaggs, making his first appearance in a California Angels uniform, drove in five runs with a home run and two singles Wednesday night to lead the Angels to a 13-7 thrashing of the Indians in Cleveland.

Manager Jim Fregosi was impressed with his instant star.

"I just told him I'll be expecting that all the time."

Not to put too much pressure on Skaggs, purchased Tuesday from Baltimore Orioles to fill a spot on the roster vacated by injured catcher Brian Downing, Fregosi quipped: "I'll probably give him another chance."

Skaggs singled home a run in the Angels' four-run first inning and drove Cleveland starter Dan Spillner, 2-2, from the mound with a two-run single in the third. The Angels scored seven times in the third to build an 11-4 lead after the Indians had tallied four runs in the bottom of the second to tie the score at 4-4.

Cleveland cut the lead to 11-7 on Toby Harrah's fourth-inning home run, his second of the season, and Tom Veryzer's first homer, a two-run blast in the sixth. Skaggs then hit his first home run of the season, a two-run shot in the seventh, to build the margin to 13-7.

"This probably exceeds what I expected to do," said Skaggs, who had one hit in five at-bats for Baltimore before the Angels purchased his contract. "For some reason, I always have good days in Cleveland.

Cleveland's Mike Hargrove singled in the seventh inning to extend his hitting streak to 22 games, tops in the major leagues this season. Veryzer's homer was his first since Sept. 17, 1978.

In other games, Boston Red Sox edged Minnesota Twins 7-6, Seattle Mariners slammed Toronto Blue Jays 7-0, Texas Rangers defeated Baltimore Orioles 6-3, Detroit Tigers downed Oakland A's 6-5, New York Yankees took apart Kansas City Royals 16-3 and Milwaukee Brewers defeated Chicago White Sox 5-1.

In the National League, Montreal Expos shaded Houston Astros 1-0, New York Mets slipped past Cincinnati Reds 7-6, Pittsburgh Pirates edged San Francisco Giants 3-2, Philadelphia Phillies bombed Atlanta Braves 9-1, St. Louis Cardinals downed San Diego Padres 2-1 and Chicago Cubs defeated Los Angeles Dodgers 5-2.

Willie Horton and Bill Stein each hit two-run homers to back the five-hit pitching of Glenn Abbott, 3-2, as Seattle won in Toronto. Horton had promised a homer to a 15-year-old Seattle youth paralysed recently while playing baseball.

Patronize socialist firms, NDP resolution urges

The resolution proposed by the Agassiz-Harrison NDP Club in the Fraser Valley, states:

"Whereas NDP business people are trying to further the cause of socialism and are providing a service to the public, therefore be it resolved that NDP members be encouraged to patronize these business and professional people whenever possible."

It suggests the party provide a list of such businesses in each constituency so New Democrats will know whom to patronize.

A total of 218 resolutions have been prepared for the three-day convention but many will not make it to the floor for debate.

One resolution that should get considerable public attention calls for condemnation of the Saskatchewan NDP for its uranium policies.

The preamble reads, in part:

"The Saskatchewan New Democratic party government has not only allowed uranium mining but has actually encouraged foreign multinational companies to exploit their uranium deposits."

Many of the resolutions have a ring of familiarity.

Calls for saving farmland, providing co-operative housing, protecting the environment, stopping dam construction, taking over B.C. Telephone, settling Indian land claims and defending prisoners' rights have all be heard before and will be heard again.

Conspicuous by their absence are the usual spate of women's rights resolutions. The only one put forward this year says mothers should receive the Canada Pension.

The three-day event, held in Pentiction's Peach Bowl Centre, opens Saturday morning with an address from national party leader Ed Broadbent.

Provincial leader Dave Barrett is not scheduled to speak until Monday morning, just a few hours before the convention breaks up.

Barrett's leadership will be put to its annual test but no challengers are expected.

This is considered a mark-time convention for the NDP as the party consolidates its position and begins to prepare for its next battle with Social Credit, one, two or three years down the road.

Charlottes 'ultimate graveyard'

VANCOUVER (CP) — Resource conflicts on the Queen Charlotte Islands are aggravated by high staff turnovers, conflicting philosophies between government agencies and inadequate technical data, says a federal-provincial study made public Wednesday.

The study recommends that incentives, such as improved housing conditions, be provided on the Queen Charlottes to attract and maintain more qualified field and management staff.

A study committee member said the islands are considered "the ultimate graveyard" and it is hard to keep staff there for more than a year or two.

He said because the region has major resource conflicts, top staff is necessary.

Endako union seeks return

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — A union which was tossed out as bargaining agent for mineworkers at Placer Development's Endako Mines at Fraser Lake is making a bid to regain it certification.

The United Steelworkers of America has applied to the provincial Labor Relations Board to have a representation vote. Mine workers now are represented by the Canadian Association of Industrial, Mechanical and Allied Workers.

The steelworkers have the support of the Prince George and District Labor Council because association does not belong to the Canadian Labor Congress or the B.C. Federation of Labor.

Steelworker representative Colin Trigwell said his union plans to set up a local here to service Endako miners.

Wharf rebuilt

KITIMAT (CP) — Eurocan Pulp and Paper Ltd. will spend $4 million rebuilding a wharf extensively damaged by fire early this week after being hit by a freighter, a company spokesman said Wednesday.

The British-registered freighter La Costa, which ran into the dock, was permitted to sail Tuesday after its agents posted a bond under a court order obtained by Eurocan.

The spokesman said the firm will maintain full operations while the wharf is being rebuilt.

Dispute stops work

REVELSTOKE (CP) — A jurisdictional dispute has halted work by 1,200 workers on B.C. Hydro's Revelstoke dam project in southeastern B.C.

Hydro spokesman Hugh Dixon said the dispute between the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and the Teamsters apparently centres on which union should transport workers and equipment to the site.

Bid withdrawn to decertify

VANCOUVER (CP) — A second bid for decertification by employees crossing picket lines at the Muckamuck restaurant was withdrawn Wednesday moments before the Labor Relations Board was to hear the appeal.

No reason was given for the move by the workers

What's worse than missing the boat?

Missing the boat and not having MSA Trip Cancellation Protection!

Everything's set for the big vacation . . . tickets all bought and paid for, clothes packed . . . and you're called for jury duty. Or Aunt Marge calls from the hospital to say she's broken her leg and you can't stay at her house after all. Or any of a dozen good reasons to cancel or delay your trip.

MSA Trip Cancellation Protection pays for the non-refundable part of your ticket when your travel plans have to be cancelled; the return fare if you have to come home early, or out-of-pocket expenses if the trip home is delayed, and more.

Simpler computers needed systems conference told

The power of computers will be wasted unless they are simplified enough to let every person run them, a systems convention was told here Wednesday.

To begin with, there won't be enough of them to meet the demand, he told the Canadian Information Processing Society at The Empress.

By the middle of the 1980s, at the present rate of computer growth, the demand for experts will exceed the supply in North America by about 50,000 people.

And with the baby boom children already grown up, there won't be enough young people with aptitude for complex computer technology to meet this demand.

The solution, Curtis said, is to simplify computers to deal with this reality.

"Every person must become a computer expert."

He said the idea is not unreasonable because there has already been a dramatic trend in the direction of universal use of computers.

At the start of the 1970s most people regarded computers as something out of science fiction but today most people encounter them in one form or another as part of daily routine.

For example, computers are used in banks, transportation companies and in the schools.

Curtis said a few people are even buying them as toys to play with at home.

This trend will have to be expanded and encouraged, he said, or the potential of computers to help society will be lost.

Computers must be simplified further so that everyone can use them.

"The user must become the computer expert."

Curtis said the computers were first designed in the late 1930s and early 1940s by mathematicians and scientists to assist them to solve problems.

"They were the only people who knew how to operate them and it didn't matter because they were the only people using them."

Gradually the number of users increased and a generation of computer experts was formed.

Now the expansion of computer knowledge must go further, to all corners of society because the spread of technology is far beyond the numbers of computer experts already and the gap is growing month by month.

Computer experts will have no concern about finding employment but they might find their role in society changing.

"They will become translators. They will have to translate computer technology for the general public."

The three-day convention ended Wednesday afternoon. Sessions were held simultaneously in The Empress, the Newcombe Auditorium and the Towne Cinema.

Officers' graduation

Two Victorians will be among 24 graduating as lieutenants this weekend at Royal Roads Military College.

Officer Cadet Steven Paget, son of Mr. and Mrs. L.J. Paget of 1375 Craigflower, and Officer Cadet Paul Leroux, son of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Leroux of 905 Bewdley, will receive a bachelor of science degree in physics and oceanography.

The public is invited to the convocation, which begins at 11 a.m. Friday at Royal Roads. There will be a sunset ceremony at 7 p.m. that evening and visitors have been asked to be in their seats by 6:30 p.m. There will also be an air show, featuring the Canadian armed forces' Sky Hawks.

The graduation parade will begin at 2 p.m. on Saturday and include a fly-past by CF-101 Voodoo aircraft from CFB Comox. The 5th Field Battery will present a 17-gun salute.

HELMCKEN HOUSE horsehair settee has just been re-covered with genuine horsehair fabric that a local upholsterer imported from England for the job. Horsehair upholstery was in fashion at the turn of the century. The fabric is made out of the hair from horses' tails. It's tough but prickly, said Marjorie Pettigrew, caretaker at Helmcken House where the settee is on display.

Chief backs youth program

Chief Irving Bailey of Oak Bay said Wednesday he is prepared to participate in a broad program to tackle youth problems in the capital region.

Bailey was responding to a motion passed by the Greater Victoria school board Monday that a committee of representatives from school boards and police departments be established to look at youth-related problems such as vandalism and drug and alcohol use.

Bailey said he's preparing a list of all agencies which are already dealing with various aspects of the problem.

After speaking with Dr. Mark Fisher, the school board trustee who proposed the motion, he decided to call a meeting with representatives from as many relevant agencies as possible.

"In our view he (Fisher) is hitting the problem dead on and there are lot of other people out there who feel the same way," Bailey said.

Schools are an important link in the chain, he said.

Teachers and counsellors are adept at spotting problems and have the opportunity to tackle them at an early stage — often before the police have a legal basis for becoming involved.

"We have no mandate to intervene before something happens," Bailey said "and often that's too late."

Police departments and schools are already working together in some areas but that relationship could be expanded.

As an example, Bailey pointed to the crime prevention program operating in Langley. It's been successful and the concept suggested for Victoria is the same.

"It's been demonstrated that such programs do succeed in minimizing problems," he said.

The crime prevention section of the attorney-general's department is looking at a similar program for the entire province, he said, but it's only in the discussion stages.

Bailey predicts other police departments and many of the agencies will get involved in such a program.

"People have to accept the principle that prevention is cost-benefit effective. Traditional methods are not working and we have to begin looking for alternatives," he said.

Family project gets no funds

According to Don McComb, special consultant to the attorney-general's ministry, the limited funds available for such projects are fully committed to programs already established in Langley, Burnaby, Delta and North Vancouver.

But McComb hasn't given up hope additional funds may be found for Saanich which is eager to hire the counsellor to facilitate the police force's newly consitututed youth and community services section.

McComb said he can appreciate the frustration of senior officers and police board members caused by the delay in getting a decision.

But, he said budget allocations of the ministry still haven't been completed and until they are, Saanich's request for $69,425 to hire a counsellor for a two-year trial period will remain up in the air.

Police chase policy

The B.C. Police Commission has worked out a set policy for police officers regarding high speed car chases.

But the commission won't release details until it hears from the 12 municipal police forces and RCMP in the province who were sent copies of the policy for their perusal last week.

Commission chairman Judge Roy McQueen said Wednesday the proposed policy is fairly broad in scope taking into account the regional variations in police traffic control throughout the province.

Money Talk

A series in which Montreal Trust answers your questions.

"Investment Fund-what are the advantages?"

"I'm interested in diversifying my portfolio of stocks. What are the advantages of an Investment Fund such as yours?"

The main advantages are simplicity for you, the investor, and the security of knowing that the Montreal Trust Investment Fund is managed by a well-respected team with many years of experience.

Our Investment Fund has both Canadian and International sections that invest in attractive equity securities.

You invest in units (a minimum of 10). At the end of each month, the current market value of these units is determined, then the income is credited to your account. This is paid to you quarterly or automatically re-invested, whichever you prefer.

Withdrawal is easy. Just let us know before the 20th of the month. The current value plus income accumulated is then paid to you without penalty.

Our charge for administering is ¾ of 1% per annum on your capital's value. But this is deducted from your income, so your full investment is always working for you. You pay no sales commission and there's no loading charge for buying and selling.

Mortgage down payments

"Could you tell me the different types of mortgage plans you have available and what kind of down payment I'd have to make on each?"

In answer to your question, there are three types of mortgages:

1. Conventional (uninsured): 75%
This type of mortgage requires a down payment of 25% of the sales price or appraised value of the home, whichever is the lesser. It eliminates the need for mortgage loan insurance coverage, thereby saving the applicant a 1%-1¼% premium based on the loan.

2. High Ratio Loan (insured): 90%
This type of mortgage requires a down payment of 10% of the sales price or appraised value, whichever is the lesser.

3. NHA (National Housing Act) mortgage: 95%
The down payment required on this type of mortgage is 5% of the value established by the CMHC (Canada Mortgage and Housing Corp.).

On all these mortgages, the interest rate normally varies with the type of loan and the term of the loan.

If you have any questions about our services, write, call, or come in and see us at the address below.

Before the judge

A 22-year-old man who wrote his own pre-sentence report for Judge Blake Allan was given a six-month jail term Wednesday in provincial court.

David Anthony Gallacher, 39 Ontario, pleaded guilty to a Feb. 3 break-in at the Folklore Guitar Centre in Market Square, and was given the sentence as well as 12 months probation.

Gallacher also entered guilty pleas on a June 25, 1978, charge of impersonation and a Feb. 4, 1980, charge of breach of recognizance.

Crown counsel Don Laughton said four witnesses saw Gallacher running with two banjos from the guitar shop at 539 Pandora. Gallacher dropped one of the banjo cases and was arrested a short time later in the 500-block Johnson.

The 1978 charge of impersonation involved Gallacher giving the name of David Arthur West when stopped in a vehicle. Laughton said Gallacher did it because he was wanted under his own name.

The breach charge resulted after Gallacher was released on his own recognizance on the breaking and entering charge and failed to report to a bail supervisor as ordered.

In his letter to the judge, which Gallacher called his own pre-sentence report, the youth said his parents were heavy alcoholics who administered severe beatings to him.

Gallacher said he led a hobo's existence since his early youth and even now never had more than what he could put in a knapsack.

Allan handed out concurrent, 30-day sentences on the other two charges.

Two men were arrested Tuesday and charged with drug-trafficking charges while a third pleaded guilty to possession of the same substance — LSD.

Albert Roy Sharpe, 29, of no fixed address, was charged with trafficking in LSD, possession of marijuana and impersonation. He was remanded in custody until next Tuesday for election of trial method, plea and possible bail hearing.

Ronald Joseph Laplant, 23, also of no fixed address, was charged with possession of LSD for the purpose of trafficking. He was released on $500 recognizance with a $200 cash deposit and remanded until Tuesday for plea.

James Lawrence Lavis, 23, who gave addresses of 101 Island Highway and 1500 Queens, was fined $200, placed on six months probation and ordered to perform 50 hours of community service work after pleading guilty to simple possession of LSD.

Crown counsel George Jones said Lavis was found with four tabs or "hits" of the drug in his possession.

A 22-year-old man who avoided arrest as a parole violator for almost two years was remanded in custody after pleading guilty to being unlawfully at large in June of 1978.

Jordan Lee Nelson, 1008 Hillside, was remanded until next Tuesday for sentencing.

Crown counsel Robert Mulligan said Nelson was convicted May 21, 1976, in Creston on three counts of theft, two counts of breaking and entering, and one count of mischief. He was given a jail sentence of nine months definite and 18 months indeterminate, Mulligan said.

Nelson finished the definite portion of his sentence Feb. 21, 1977, and was scheduled to finish the other part Sept. 2, 1978.

However, he was released on parole Feb. 25, 1977. In 1978, Mulligan said, Nelson ran into some difficulties, getting evicted from his residence and leaving his Camosun College program. He was advised April 18 that his parole was suspended and was ordered to report to Wilkinson Road jail the following day to finish off about three months of the indeterminate part of his sentence.

Nelson, who had his parole officially revoked June 23, 1978, failed to report to the prison and had been at large since.

He was arrested Saturday after Victoria police were called concerning someone swinging a chain at passing cars on Hillside.

Defence lawyer Steven Kelliher said Nelson was not the person swinging the chain. He said Nelson had been working for a national moving firm in Whitehorse until February when he was laid off because of lack of work.

Court was informed Brighton had previous, related convictions in 1973, 1975, and 1978.

He was remanded until Friday for pleas.

Hughes heads Jaycees

A-G backs police merger

Attorney-General Allan Williams favors amalgamation of municipal police forces in Greater Victoria but said Wednesday there is nothing he can do to force such a move.

A B.C. Police Commission study recommends full amalgamation of the Victoria, Saanich, Central Saanich, Esquimalt and Oak Bay forces as the best way of achieving greater efficiency and economy.

"There are clearly very valuable operational and financial benefits from an amalgamation of these forces. It would improve the operational efficiency of police services in the lower part of Vancouver Island generally," Williams said.

However, the attorney-general added he can understand the pride each of the five municipalities takes in its own force and their reluctance to amalgamate.

"If the full amalgamation is not possible then I would hope there could be some service agreements entered into, whereby they would join together in providing certain operational services," Williams said.

"There are significant savings that could be accomplished."

"They would have a better opportunity of using the 999 emergency number which, in the present circumstances, is virtually impossible to use," he said.

The five municipal mayors and police boards have been discussing integration of some police services for several months, communications among them.

New Direct Dial Rates
You can now dial direct to 14 Caribbean countries. The result is dramatic savings. For example: a directly dialed 3 minute call to Bermuda costs as little as $4.50 compared to a person-to-person 3 minute call which is $9.00. A saving of 50%. See chart for savings to other destinations.

Here's How You Save
When you dial yourself (without operator assistance) you pay by the minute instead of being charged an automatic 3 minute minimum.

Additional Minutes Cost Less
Another nice surprise. Rates for additional minutes have been reduced to most Caribbean countries.

$1 million swap scuttled by balky boat

A million dollars was to change hands on the high seas at a rendezvous 200 miles west of Alaska, a Victoria county court marijuana trial was told Wednesday.

But it never occurred, said William Francis Perka, 35, of Port Townsend, Wash., because the cannabis-laden Panamanian-registered freighter Samarkanda had to put into Sydney Inlet 50 kilometres northwest of Tofino for emergency repairs.

Perka, one of eight men accused of importing cannabis marijuana into Canada and possession of marijuana for the purpose of trafficking, was to continue his testimony today.

He said he was to receive $1 million when the Samarkanda met the Julia B. and was to transfer it to two other men also standing trial, Jaime Marin, 38, of Marina del Rey, Calif., and Paul Oscar Nelson, 27, of Seattle and Marina del Rey.

Perka said he was not prepared to make the trip for anything less than $400,000 to $500,000 including the people who helped him.

The voyage was agreed to in January, 1979, between himself, Marin, Nelson and two men Perka contacted, William Terry Hines, 39, of San Rafael, Calif., and Stephen Earl Johnson, 34, of Port Townsend, who are also standing trial.

Perka said he was the navigator, Hines the engineer, Johnson the radio operator and the skipper was Marco Antonio Lopera Penagos, 59, of Mellin, Colombia.

Perka said he grew up in San Francisco, graduated in engineering at Oregon State University and learned navigation in the air wing of the U.S. Navy, serving 10 months in Vietnam.

He first became acquainted with the Samarkanda in 1971 when its owner, Jaime Cordoba, asked him to supervise a refit which he did. He described Cordoba as a Colombian citizen living in the U.S.

Cordoba planned to sail the Samarkanda to South America to use in salvage operations and as a tug and he signed on as navigator, later taking over as skipper, and working on her until late 1974. Hines was the engineer in 1974.

He said the Samarkanda was based in Colombia and was engaged in legitimate marine salvage, towing and general cargo movement.

Perka said he and Hines left the vessel in 1975. He returned to California, married a Canadian in Vanderhoof, B.C., and they lived in San Francisco, later moving to Port Townsend where they joined Johnson, an old friend of his.

He became involved in what was before the court when he telephoned Ralph Cordoba just before Christmas, 1978, to ask about his brother Jaime.

He got a phone call from Ralph in January, 1979, who told him he was considering leaving his job as an accountant with Standard Oil because he was interested in a business proposition with Marin.

He said Ralph wondered if he could find a vessel because of his previous marine experience and he flew to San Francisco and met Marin and Nelson but not Ralph.

He was told Marin owned or had an interest in the Samarkanda and Marin sounded out his interest in making a good deal of money for a certain operation.

The cargo, said Perka, was to be cannabis. The others wanted him to assure the vessel left Colombia for an airlift drop zone off the coast and deliver the cargo in international waters off Alaska, the first choice, or off Washington, the second choice.

Perka said he told them he wanted no involvement if the Samarkanda was to enter territorial waters and thought the risks were not great because the operation, loading and unloading, was to be done in international waters.

He later flew to Tumaco, Colombia, where the Samarkanda sailed April 6, 1979. He was assured the boat had had a major refit in Salina Cruz, Mexico, but later found out it was a shoddy overhaul.

More than 600 bales were dropped by aircraft at sea and pulled aboard the Samarkanda, starting April 10. Because of aircraft engine problems, the last drop did not occur until April 28.

(By this time, according to an earlier exhibit entered with the agreement of the defence, members of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration had begun surveillance in the Seattle area, noting movements of Nelson, someone named Thompson and an unknown man, joined the next month by others including Marin).

The Samarkanda left the drop zone April 30, intending to rendezvous with the Julia B. 200 miles west of the Alaska Panhandle where the purchasers of the cargo were to meet them. They phoned Marin at his Los Angeles office to let him know they were on their way.

Perka said the crew encountered minor problems but nothing major at first with the Samarkanda. The first major problem was with the refrigeration system which gave up. There were also problems with dirty fuel forcing frequent changes of filters. The generators were also a problem.

On May 16, Hines had shut down one engine to change filters and it wouldn't restart until May 21, meaning they sailed with only one engine.

The next day, they radioed Nelson that they had lost one engine and he said he had just left Seattle. The following day, the rendezvous point off Alaska was confirmed.

On May 19, Hines had problems with the water pump on one generator which kept losing suction. It was decided the best thing to do for the safety of the ship was to put in at Cape St. James, an isolated area at the south end of the Queen Charlottes.

On May 20, while steering a course to Cape St. James, a generator overheated.

"We all got together . . . we were 180 miles off the coast with the possibility of losing all power and we had eight to 10-foot swells . . . we had one main engine and generator . . . if we lost that there was a danger to the lives of all of us . . . at that point we decided to come in for shelter and make repairs," he said.

"Our concern was that it would be unsafe, imprudent and a danger to the life of all aboard if we continued north and lost the engine. We felt it was a life-and-death situation, to stay out at sea would jeopardize everyone."

Nelson radioed them where he was and the Samarkanda was given the nautical coordinates of No Name Bay at the head of Sydney Inlet.

Late on May 20, a hose broke, inundating the remaining operational generator with saltwater and leaving the ship without any power or electricity for two hours before provisional repairs were made, he said. The gyrocompass was out and the ship only had a magnetic compass which had not been adjusted properly in the earlier refit in Mexico.

Around midnight, going into May 21, the engine was restarted and they sailed a course for Sydney Inlet.

Perka said the crew was not familiar with the area and had no detailed charts but was in radio contact with Nelson. The Samarkanda entered Sydney Inlet as it was getting dark and sailed into No Name Bay. The depth finder was not working.

When they stopped in the bay, he noticed the tide was changing and the stern came on rock and the ship was aground. The Samarkanda was leaning to starboard and there was a fear she would capsize.

He said the captain ordered everything to be offloaded and this began around 1 a.m. May 22. At one point, water was lapping near the hatches and the deck was inclined at some points to an angle of almost 45 degrees.

Perka said he had gone ashore when the RCMP raid began at dawn. He ran into the bush, later meeting Nelson, and the two of them spent seven or eight days in the rain forest eating only ferns and a frog which he said wasn't very appetizing.

He said he ran because he didn't want to be caught. He said he didn't know about the common law of distress, which defence laywer Josiah Wood told the jury last week could be applied because the ship was in imminent danger and there was never any intention to import the cargo into Canada.

He and Nelson gave up trying to walk inland and returned to the coast, where they were picked up by an RCMP vessel.

DIAMOND-STUDDED tie-pins were presented this week to three department of transport pilots in a special ceremony at the Dallas Road base. The awards were in recognition of 1,000 flying hours in Alouette III helicopters. Ian Powick, representing Aerospace Helicopter Corporation of Calgary, makers of the aircraft, pins Ivan Shannon, watched by pilots Doug Callin, at left, and Bill Clifford. Unable to attend the ceremony was chief mechanic Sam Sirna, also honored. (Bill Halkett photo)

We're looking for more Canadian partners to participate in CF-18 Hornet Industrial Benefits.

Canada's new CF-18 includes the highest technology of any advanced combat aircraft in the world today. A versatile, reliable fighter, the CF-18 will bring a new level of defence to Canadian skies, and new strength to the NATO and NORAD alliances.

The Industrial Benefits Program negotiated by the Canadian Government transcends the CF-18 Hornet. It offers new and unparalleled economic opportunities to companies, and people, all across Canada.

How about your company? Are you in a position to share in this $3 billion Industrial Benefits Program for Canada?

The Industrial Benefits Program offers to Canadian companies in every Province a 15-year infusion of advanced technology, and the export assistance to go with it, to serve U.S., Canadian, and world-wide markets well into the 21st century. Can your company profit from this technology—in solar and wind energy, electronics, machining, composite manufacturing, microwave drying, cryogenics, or liquid natural gas containment?

The Canadian-American partnerships we propose are certainly not new at McDonnell Douglas. Over the past 17 years, thousands of Canadians at more than 700 Canadian firms coast to coast have shared in over $1.5 billion in McDonnell Douglas contracts. Canadian companies currently hold contracts for about $1 billion in work on many of our programs, including our DC-9 Super 80, DC-10, KC-10A, and cruise missile guidance system.

For 17 years, the record is one of commitments fulfilled—on both sides of the border. McDonnell Douglas with contracts, Canada with craftsmanship.

The next move is yours. Write, on your letterhead, for our "Supplier's Facility Questionnaire" and our brochure which explains the business of doing business with McDonnell Douglas. Join the many Canadian companies that are already a part of the CF-18 Industrial Benefits Program. Address your request to: Canadian Industrial Benefits Centre, McDonnell Douglas, Box 516, St. Louis, MO 63166, U.S.A. Please indicate whether you wish these in French or English.

THUMB SUCKING helps concentration? Quebec Premier Rene Levesque and his wife, Corinne, chew it over while listening to speeches at a yes rally in Drummondville Wednesday night.

National referendum next?

Times News Services

Premier Levesque, on a whirlwind tour of the province in the final countdown to the referendum Tuesday, offered Prime Minister Trudeau a way out of the 'impasse' that Ottawa does not have a mandate to negotiate sovereignty-association — though it seems the prime minister is hardly likely to accept.

Why not hold a referendum in English Canada and ask for a mandate?

It has always been Levesque's contention that — despite the refusals of Trudeau and the English-Canadian premiers — most ordinary Canadians would favor negotiating if Quebecers vote democratically for sovereignty-association.

Levesque also repeated past assurances that if he loses the referendum, he'd continue to attend federal-provincial conferences, working for reform within Confederation even though he thinks there isn't much chance of success.

Levesque's suggestion to use a second provincial referendum, allowed under law, to resolve Quebec's destiny internally, would be a departure from its original purpose. The original intent of a second referendum, provided for along with the May 20 vote, was to allow Quebecers to ratify any changes in Quebec's status resulting from negotiations on sovereignty-association with the rest of Canada.

The premier however, stopped short of defining what the second referendum might ask.

"If the whole (Quebec) population is treated contemptously ... if the question were drowned out by the provinces," Levesque said, "well, there'd be a second referendum and that's it."

Two weeks ago, Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau challenged Levesque to ask Quebecers if they favored outright independence instead of giving the PQ government a mandate to negotiate sovereignty-association for the province.

That second referendum, Levesque added, would ensure that a new political regime "was not parachuted onto the people's heads."

"The Quebec question has to be solved and not swept under the carpet," Levesque said, adding however the only acceptable form of negotiation would be between two equal entities.

At a rally of 5,000 people in Drummondville, Levesque denounced federalist forces for stonewalling with "fear tactics" based on the threat of Quebec's independence that risked alienating the young from the old.

Quebecers, he said, needed a strong bargaining mandate to rid themselves of a reputation as "the beggars in a federal system," in which the province suffered as a dumping ground for Prince Edward Island potatoes and Alberta beef.

"Quebec," he added, "is buying too much and not producing enough."

Meanwhile, possible loopholes in Quebec's referendum spending limits and routine court delays have taken some steam out of a provincial official's drive to ban a controversial federal advertising blitz for the five remaining days of the campaign.

A special three-judge referendum council reserved its decision Wednesday on the action by referendum financing director Pierre-Olivier Boucher, after serious questions arose about whether the tribunal even had the legal authority even to issue restraining orders.

Alan Gold, the chief judge of provincial court and council head, said the ruling might come Friday, four days before Quebec voters troop to the polls May 20.

In another development, a letter has been received by Levesque from the Scottish National Party, which advocates independence for Scotland, wishing him luck in the referendum.

"All our thoughts will be with you that day," the party's national executive said in a French-language telegram sent from Edinburgh Wednesday.

"We encourage all Scots resident in Quebec to show confidence in their adopted nation by voting yes to sovereignty-association."

Gunmen kill worker

BELFAST (AP) — Masked gunmen killed a Protestant construction worker Wednesday in Londonderry, Northern Ireland's second-largest city. Police said it appeared to be a sectarian assassination.

Neck and neck, say the pollsters

MONTREAL (CP) — The referendum race is so tight and the number of undecided voters so high that it would be rash to predict a winner May 20, an independent team of public opinion survey critics said Wednesday.

The latest published poll results have indicated about 37 per cent of voters will opt for yes, about 40 per cent for the no and about 22 per cent say they are undecided on the question of granting the Quebec government a mandate to negotiate sovereignty-association.

"The difference between the two options is not sufficiently important to allow a statistically-based conclusion that one or the other has a lead," spokesmen for the survey committee said at a news conference.

They also warned that attempts to apportion undecided voters to either camp in the referendum campaign might have little relation to the real intentions of voters.

It's cushy working for gov't: report

By CAROL GOAR
FP News Service

OTTAWA — Exactly one month after the Auditor General's Report confirmed the widespread suspicion that many public servants do far less work than their private counterparts, a respected research group has given taxpayers added grounds for disenchantment.

The Conference Board released a report Wednesday showing that the government pays its workers at least as much — often more — than their private sector counterparts and provides more generous benefits.

Although professionals and technicians receive roughly the same hourly rates whether they work in the public or private sector, administrative support workers — clerks, typists and secretaries — fare considerably better working for the government.

Furthermore, public servants of all types come out clearly ahead in non-monetary benefits, especially pensions and paid days off.

The Conference Board study comes in the wake of a highly publicized survey, last month, by Auditor General J.J. Macdonell, showing that government office workers have an efficiency rating of 60.8 per cent, compared with 87.8 per cent in the private sector. Eighty per cent is considered a minimum acceptable rating.

In introducing its 75-page study, the Conference Board says, "Many individuals have argued that governments have few, if any, economic constraints that limit the size of employment or rates of pay in the public sector and that political constraints have been ineffective . . . . This state of affairs is believed not only to have caused problems for private sector firms attempting to recruit and retain highly qualified personnel, but also is suspected of having been a major source of upward pressure on labor costs and infation in the economy as a whole."

Other findings by the board:

— Since a higher percentage of bureaucrats than private employees are classified at senior levels, the government offers more high-paying jobs than the business sector.

— Average salaries paid by provincial and municipal governments exceed private sector pay scales by five per cent.

— A normal work week for provincial and muncipal bureaucrats is 34 to 36.5 hours, compared with the 37-to-38-hour week required of most private sector workers. Federal workers fall between the two extremes.

— University workers, who are paid considerably less than those wth similar qualifications in private business, tend to drag down average pay levels for public employees.

The board — with the typical academic's caution — urges Canadians not to jump to hasty conclusions. "In interpreting differences between sectors, it is important to emphasize that the size of the differential does not provide sufficient information to determine whether or not it is justified."

Plant patent plan criticized

OTTAWA (CP) — The government is preparing to give plant breeders and researchers patent-like protection for their work at the same time other countries are having second thoughts about similar legislation they enacted years ago, says Pat Mooney, a critic of the proposal.

Mooney, author of Seeds of the Earth, a book harshly critical of so-called plant breeders rights, told a news conference the U.S. and European countries are questioning the benefit of their plant laws.

Meanwhile, the federal government is preparing to introduce legislation to allow companies and researchers to collect royalties on plants they develop.

The likely result of the legislation "will be increased foreign ownership of Canadian seed companies" and greater dependence on foreign companies for seeds which won't be suited to Canadian climatic and soil conditions, Mooney said.

If the government wanted to develop a stronger domestic seed and plant industry, it should offer a variety of tax and other incentives that would create competition and lead to new plant crop varities, he said.

He said that instead of introducing legislation, the government should produce a discussion paper on plant breeders rights and hold hearings on it across the country so farmers, consumers and breeders could voice their concerns.

New rails hinge on rates

REVELSTOKE (CP) — Financing by CP Rail Ltd. of a proposed $300-million construction project in the Rocky Mountains will remain frozen until Ottawa agrees to revise the 53-year-old freight rates for grain shipments, a senior rail official said Wednesday.

Bill Stinson, executive vice-president of CP Rail Ltd., said the company would not finance the project without assurances it would not have to continue suffering "heavy losses" on its grain shipments.

About 25 per cent of CP Rail's volume is accounted for by grain shipments.

The project now tied up in the wrangle over the Crowsnest Pass freight rates would clear a major bottleneck in freight shipment to the West Coast.

Stinson said a just compensation for carrying grain from producing provinces to export points would amount to six times the current statutory rate.

Canada's two major rail carriers are committed to shipping grain at rates fixed in 1927 and guaranteed by federal law.

Farmers have traditionally fought revisions to the Crow rate, saying the railway was given concessions in Western Canada in return for its commitment to ship grain at a fixed price.

But Stinson said operating costs and the need for money for major rail line upgrading demand a revision of the Crow rates.

Although Canadian Pacific Ltd.'s railway division has consistently shown a profit of about eight per cent annually, Stinson said it would be almost impossible to acquire capital funding for the major phase of the Rocky Mountain upgrading without receiving compensatory rates for grain.

CP Rail has spent about $40 million on the first two phases of double tracking through the Rockies. The initial phase, to be opened today, allows the railway to increase tonnage on its main line by reducing the upward grade on the mountain tracks.

The improvements give the firm increased capacity on westbound freight, which now needs additional locomotives to get it over a high mountain pass.

Stinson said the project would also open the westbound B.C. line to increased coal and potash traffic as well as speeding grain shipments to the port of Vancouver.

He argued a revised Crow rate would also lead to more efficient grain transportation.

Depending on the scope of the agreement on new rates, he said CP would assume responsibility for grain transportation, as well as maintenance of grain cars and prairie rail branch lines which are now subsidized by the federal government.

Stinson said he does not plan to present the proposed project to the company's board of directors until CP Rail gets a commitment to compensatory freight rates for grain or some alternate solution that would allow it to receive a fair return on grain hauling.

While holding out a threat that the company would not go ahead without a federal commitment on Crow rates, Stinson said he was optimistic the project would be completed.

Soaring Alberta suicides linked to boom economy

CALGARY (CP) — A boom economy and people's high expectations have contribuited to a doubling of suicide rates in Alberta, says a provincial government specialist on suicides.

Dr. Mark Solomon said Wednesday surveys show between 1951 and 1977, the number of suicides in Alberta increased from nine per 100,000 people to 18 per 100,000.

In all age groups, the "increases in Alberta are up like crazy," Solomon said. The most dramatic increase has come in the 20 to 24 age group.

The statistics mean Alberta now shares with British Columbia the highest number of deaths by suicide in Canada, he said.

Solomon, a participant in a seminar on suicide sponsored by University of Calgary and the Canadian Mental Health Association, said the increase in the number of suicides goes hand-in-hand with an increase in alcohol abuse and the number of family break-ups in the province.

Another factor is that morals have changed, probably making suicide more acceptable as a means to solve various problems.

Provincial statistics show that there were 105 suicides in Edmonton and 80 in Calgary last year. The province had a total of 314 suicides in 1979.

Solomon said firearms were used in most of those suicides.

"This is a gun-happy place — a frontier," he said.

Although the exact causes of suicides is often difficult to determine, Solomon said the boom economy in Alberta means people have high expectations. If those expectations are not met, some people start panicking and thinking they are inferior.

In other provinces where unemployment is high, the number of suicides is relatively low because people have a different attitude toward life.

Interest rates affect minority

TORONTO (CP) — Fifty-five per cent of Canadians questioned in a Gallup Poll recently say they have not been affected by high interest rates.

The poll showed 21 per cent said they had been affected considerably and 23 per cent to a limited degree. One per cent said they couldn't tell if they had been affected.

The poll also showed there was significantly more of those polled in the 30- to 49-year-old age group who said they had been affected than have those older or younger.

Fifty-eight per cent of that group said they were affected while 44 per cent in the 18- to 29-year-old group said they were affected and 30 per cent of the over 50 group said they were affected.

The question asked was: "As you probably know, interest rates on loans and mortgages have increased markedly over the past year. Has this affected you, yourself, to a considerably, to a limited degree or has it had really no effect on you."

The results are based on 1,051 personal, in-home interviews with adults, 18 years and over conducted in early April. A sample this size is accurate to within a four percentage point margin 19 times in 20.

OPPORTUNITIES OPEN for deaf with this pocket alarm designed by Robert Karn, an electrical engineer from Kitchener, Ont. The device vibrates at the sound of an alarm, and with one in his pocket, a deaf person will know instantly when an alarm sounds. It should enable deaf persons to work in industry, knowing they will be alerted by the vibrator to sounds they cannot hear.

Bankruptcy down

OTTAWA (CP) — There were 2,232 bankruptcies in April, down from 2,263 in March, the consumer and corporate affairs department said today.

The department's bankruptcy branch said in its monthly statement that 1,728 bankrupcies were personal and 504 were business. In March the figures were 1,721 and 542 respectively.

But the April total is up 27.32 per cent over the same period last year.

And since Jan. 1, there have been 9,340 personal and business bankruptcies, up 15.12 per cent from the same period last year when 8,113 were filed.

The 504 firms that folded last month had liabilities of about $48.6 million; those that collapsed in March had liabilities of $61.8 million.

So far this year, 2,273 businesses have closed their doors with liabilities of more than $233.2 million.

Bullet proofing urged for police

OTTAWA (CP) — The government of Canada should provide bullet-proof vests to all police forces in the country, a Tory MP suggested Wednesday.

Gus Mitges, MP for the Ontario riding of Grey-Simcoe, said the new vests are comfortable to wear and would reduce serious injuries and deaths suffered by policemen.

The proposal failed to win the unanimous consent of MPs required for an immediate vote.

Bad case of the blahs grips MPs

By JOHN FERGUSON

OTTAWA (CP) — Can you name one exciting thing that's happened on Parliament Hill in the last month?

Stumped?

The truth is that in the one month since the 32nd Parliament opened amid the promises and glitter of the speech from the throne, little has happened that would rate a page in the history books.

Even the politicians concede that Parliament — because of a combination of exhaustion, boredom and lack of issues — has a bad case of the blahs.

"Nobody has any zip," says the Progressive Conservative party whip, Bill Kempling, whose job it is to get the troops up for the fray in the Commons.

"I don't think there will be any zip until after a recess," says Tory Bill Jarvis, from the southern Ontario riding of Perth. But he thinks that if the House is still sitting in the hot weather of July, as expected, tempers may get short, MPs chippy.

The New Democratic Party, packed with young rookies who are still finding their legs, has also been finding it difficult to launch a co-ordinated attack by its 32 members.

"I know it's awful," said Jim Fulton, NDP MP for Skeena in British Columbia. "But we're hoping we can liven it up a bit."

The slow pace has been so noticeable that one Liberal strategist suspected the opposition has a conscious plan to lay off the government for fear of jeopardizing the federal position in Tuesday's Quebec referendum.

Kempling strongly denies that. He says it's more a case of MPs recovering from the exhaustion of two elections in one year. And for the Tories' there has been the psychological impact of being turfed out of power after aush a brief period at the controls.

What's more, there hasn't been any sexy legislation to get MPs excited.

And the referendum has diverted attention elsewhere. It has been a preoccupation for the 74 Quebec Liberal MPs who all but vacate the Commons Mondays and Fridays to fight in the no campaign. They have an agreement with the opposition there will not be votes on those days until after next Tuesday's ballot.

Opposition Leader Joe Clark has made two forays into Quebec to make speeches on behalf of the no committee and Prime Minister Trudeau has made three.

"I don't think anybody really gives a damn about what we're doing here," says John Crosbie, the former Conservative finance minister, who himself has been keeping up a busy schedule of speeches outside the capital.

"We can't get too excited yet. We've got four years to go."

Finally, declining interest rates, little progress in energy pricing talks and relative stability in unemployment and inflation rates has chopped from under the opposition some of the platforms from which attacks might be launched.

Charge RCMP, Kaplan urged

OTTAWA (CP) — It is becoming difficult for young people to take the law seriously when the government has refused for 31 months to prosecute Mounties involved in apparent cases of arson, break and entry, and theft, says David Lewis, former leader of the New Democratic Party.

Lewis was part of Canadian Civil Liberties Association delegation that was told Wednesday by Solicitor-General Bob Kaplan it will be at least two more months before he will consider such action.

Kaplan said he will act promptly when he receives the report of a royal commission, appointed in July, 1977, to look into allegations of RCMP law-breaking. The report is expected this summer.

Members of the delegation are concerned that the royal commission under Mr. Justice David C. McDonald of Alberta will whitewash the RCMP and said there is no excuse for further stalling.

Lewis, in an interview after the meeting, said there is an apparent double standard in the way authorities are refusing to carry out normal law enforcement.

And that refusal is bringing the law into disrepute among Canadian youth, he added.

The association presented Kaplan with a 15,000-name petition urging that the law be applied to the Mounties in the same way it is to everyone else.

An accompanying brief noted that postal union leader Jean-Claude Parrot was quickly charged, tried, convicted and jailed when he urged union members not to obey a parliamentary order to end a strike and return to work in October, 1978.

Parrot's treatment contrasts sharply with that of the Mounties who have testified that they burned a barn, stole dynamite, broke into private homes and offices, opened private mail and abducted individuals.

No charges have been laid in such cases and Ottawa has resisted efforts by Ontario to get details of alleged RCMP law-breaking in that province.

Kaplan said he will co-operate with provinces that ask for details of specific cases but will not turn over details that aren't solicited.

British Columbia announced earlier Wednesday it has asked for details of Operation Checkmate cases in that province.

Kaplan said he would meet the B.C. request but the details are scanty and the province would have to do further investigation before it could act.

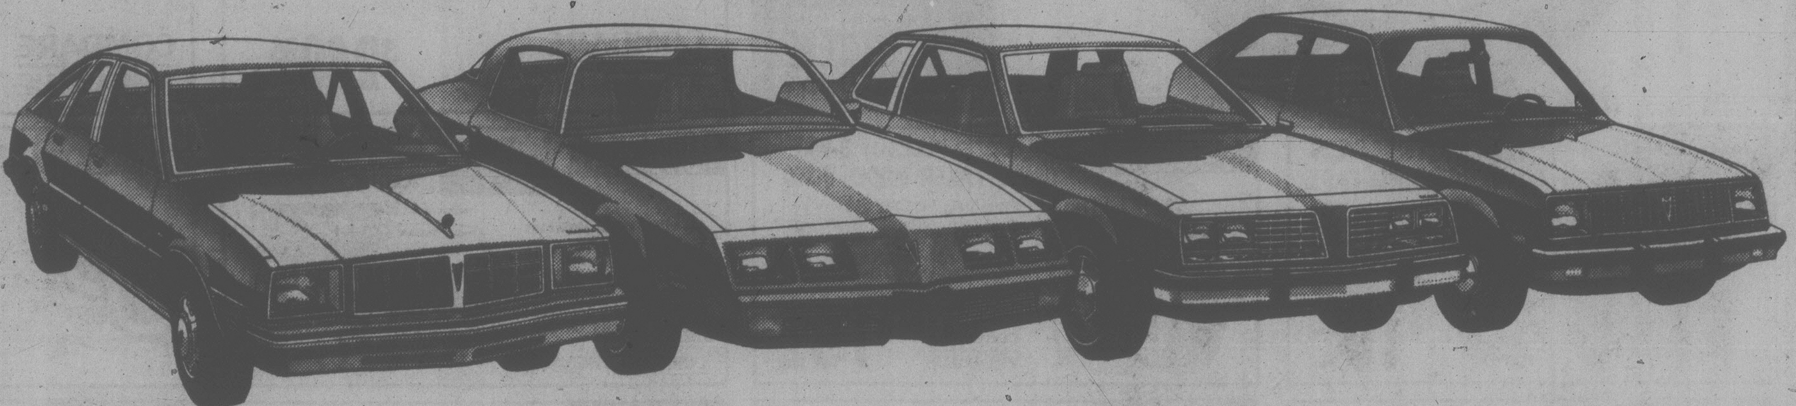
CDC profit doubles

VANCOUVER (CP) — Canada Development Corp. said Wednesday first quarter net income more than doubled to $45.9 million compared with the $19.1 million earned during the same period in 1979.

Consolidated revenues reached $570.6 million, an increase of 27 per cent, over the first quarter of 1979, the company said in a news release.

The increase in gross revenue reflects greater sales volumes of the corporation's subsidiaries, Polysar and Petrosar. Improved earnings of Polysar and Texasgulf together with reduced negative impact from Petrosar accounted for the increased net income.

PONTIAC TAKES ON THE IMPORTS ...AND WINS!



PHOENIX vs. TOYOTA CORONA

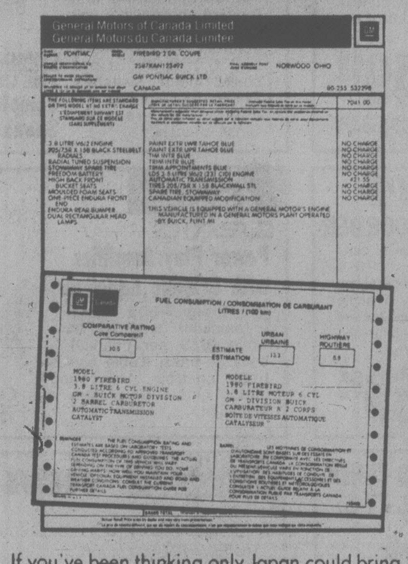
PHOENIX OFFERS BETTER ESTIMATED MPG.* Based on the Transport Canada approved rating, a new Phoenix with 2.5 L 4 cyl. engine and 4-speed standard transmission rates a figure of 34.8 MPG (8.1 L/100 km). That's better than Corona with 5-speed transmission at 32.1 MPG (8.8 L/100 km).

PHOENIX HAS LOWER ANNUAL FUEL COSTS. Phoenix saves you an estimated $35 over the Corona. That's not much but when you add it to the price difference of the two cars just look at your savings.

PHOENIX IS PRICED AT $1,060 LESS. The Manufacturer's Suggested Retail Price for a 5-door Phoenix hatchback is $6,698. The Toyota, at $7,758, is $1,060 more.

Add the difference in price and estimated cost of gas for one year and you may do $1,095 better in a Phoenix!

FIREBIRD vs. MAZDA RX-7



If you've been thinking only Japan could bring you economical sports machines, Pontiac is about to burst the bubble.

FIREBIRD OFFERS BETTER ESTIMATED MPG.* Based on the Transport Canada approved rating, a new Firebird with 3.8 L V6 engine and automatic transmission, rates a figure of 26.6 MPG (10.6 L/100 km). That's 2.5 MPG (1.1 L/100 km) better than a Mazda GS RX-7 automatic.

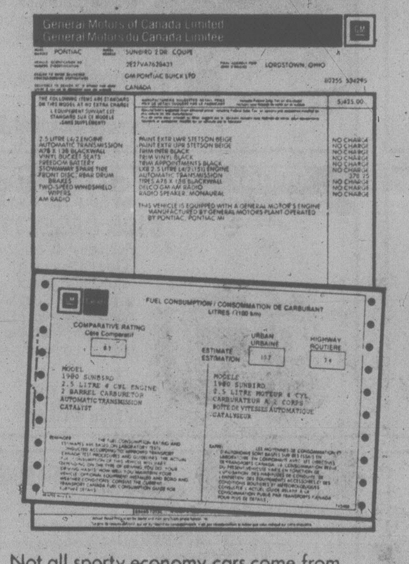
FIREBIRD HAS LOWER ANNUAL FUEL COSTS. Firebird can save you approximately $56 a year over the Mazda. Every little bit helps.

FIREBIRD OFFERS BETTER RANGE. With a fuel tank capacity of 17.5 gallons, Firebird can go an estimated 460 miles per tankful, about 171 miles more than Mazda.

FIREBIRD IS PRICED AT $4,657 LESS. Firebird with available automatic transmission has a Manufacturer's Suggested Retail Price of $7,462.55. The Mazda with automatic? $12,120. $4,657.45 less for Firebird.

Add up the price difference and the estimated savings on one year's fuel. The difference between Firebird and the Mazda is estimated at $4,713.45. You'll get a lot farther in a new Pontiac Firebird.

SUNBIRD vs. DATSUN 510



Not all sporty economy cars come from overseas. One of the best comes from Pontiac.

SUNBIRD OFFERS BETTER ESTIMATED MPG.* The 2-door Sunbird with 2.5 L 4 cyl. engine and automatic transmission has a Transport Canada approved rating of 32.4 MPG (8.7 L/100 km). The Datsun rates slightly less at 32.1 MPG (8.8 L/100 km).

SUNBIRD OFFERS BETTER RANGE. Sunbird's fuel tank capacity of 15.4 gallons (70 litres) will help you go an estimated 488.7 miles on a tank of gas. The Datsun runs out of gas at about 374.3 miles.

SUNBIRD IS PRICED AT $1,056.75 LESS. The Sunbird's Manufacturer's Suggested Price is just $5,803.25. The Datsun, at $6,860, is $1,056.75 more. You'll likely do better in a Sunbird.

ACADIAN 'S' vs. VW RABBIT

ACADIAN OFFERS BETTER ESTIMATED MPG.* Based on the Transport Canada approved fuel economy rating, Acadian with 1.6 L 4 cyl. engine and 4-speed standard transmission rates a figure of 36.2 MPG (7.8 L/100 km). The 4-speed 2-door Rabbit with a gasoline engine gets just 33.6 MPG (8.4 L/100 km). Bet you're surprised.

ACADIAN HAS LOWER ANNUAL FUEL COSTS. You'll save about $60 in an Acadian over the Rabbit.

ACADIAN OFFERS BETTER RANGE. Acadian's larger 10.4 gallon tank will deliver about 376.5 miles. The Rabbit will run out of gas after about 295.7 miles.

ACADIAN IS PRICED AT $2,167 LESS. The Manufacturer's Suggested Retail Price of an Acadian 'S' is $4,678. The Rabbit at $6,845 is $2,167 more.

Add up the difference in price and fuel costs and an Acadian may be better by $2,227.

PHOENIX WINS BY $1,095!

FIREBIRD WINS BY $4,713!

SUNBIRD WINS BY $1,056!

ACADIAN WINS BY $2,227!

FUEL ECONOMY – Based on Transport Canada test methods. Remember: These fuel consumption/economy figures are estimates which may be subject to revision. The actual results you get will vary depending on the type of driving you do, your driving habits, your vehicle's condition and optional equipment installed. Some cars may have a different rating and range with other drive-train components. See your dealer for details. ANNUAL FUEL COSTS – These costs are based on the difference in the Transport Canada rating for the vehicles and on annual vehicle travel of 12,000 miles. Gasoline is estimated to cost $1.20 a gallon. RANGE – Range estimates obtained by multiplying each car's Transport Canada rating by its fuel tank capacity. PRICE – Price comparisons are based on Manufacturer's Suggested Retail Prices of base cars (plus automatic transmissions where indicated) as of April 11, 1980. Level of standard equipment may vary. Provincial or local taxes, freight and registration charges extra. Prices subject to change. Dealers may sell for less.

Leon Balcer, leader of the 1965 "palace revolt" against former prime minister John Diefenbaker, has retired from politics into a comfortable life as lobbyist and industrialist. The Quebec lawyer and former president of the Progressive Conservative Party made headlines in the early 1960s when he emerged as the high-powered rebel minister of transport. In 1965, he left the party to become an independent, declaring: "There is no place for a French Canadian in the party of Mr. Diefenbaker." Today, Balcer, who once lost a contest for a Liberal seat in Quebec, lives in Ottawa working as a lobbyist for the Electronic Industries Association of Canada and president of a five-company consortium selling communications equipment in West Africa.

Dear Abby:

I don't know exactly how to start this, but I've just got go get help with this problem.

I am a young working mother with two preschool children who need to be watched while I'm at work.

I refuse to leave them with just anybody, so I was thrilled when I finally found a woman who can come to my home early every morning and stay through supper.

She is wonderful with the children. They love her and she adores them, and I couldn't ask for a more reliable woman. But there is one thing — she smells! When I come home I can hardly stay in the house, it smells so bad. Open windows and deodorizers don't even work. What should I do?

Suffocated

Dear Suffocated:

You must tell her! But do it with kindness. Let her know that the children love her, and you need her. Then tell her that it is essential that she bathe and change all her clothes daily. If this odor persists, she sould see a doctor.

Such odors can sometimes be symptomatic of serious disease if not rid by simple hygiene.

Dear Abby:

My husband, while playing cards at the home of a friend, tapped the bowl of his pipe against the rim of a crystal ashtray and it cracked immediately. It was an old and lovely ashtray and would be very costly to replace today. My husband offered his sincere apology — but said nothing about replacing it.

On another occasion, at a party in our home, a guest accidentally knocked over a cordial glass and broke it.

I feel that if someone breaks something in the home of another, restitution is in order.

Reader

Dear Reader:

If a guest chips, breaks, burns or soils something in the home of another, he should make every effort to replace it. Irreplaceable antiques, however, belong in a china cabinet.

Dear Abby:

My 18-year-old daughter had a baby. The father did not want to accept any of the responsibility, so my daughter decided to give her baby up for adoption in order to provide it with a loving mother and father. It was a very difficult decision, but that's the way she wanted it, and we, her parents went along with it.

My question: When I am asked how many grandchildren I have, do I include this child in the count even though she was adopted?

Loving Grandma

Dear Grandma:

Only if you'd feel comfortable answering the questions concerning this grandchild that would naturally follow.

Only those in the age range between four to 18 years need apply.

It's not the Times that's getting into the bargain business. It's Camosun College's dental assistant program that rents space in the press building.

Brenda Jacobs, one of the three instructors, explains that from May 5 to June 20 children up to 18 years of age can get their teeth cleaned and a fluoride treatment — all for free.

The work is being carried out by the 31 students on the 10-month course between the hours of 8 a.m. and 3 p.m.

All that is needed to take advantage of the offer is a phone call to Brenda or one of the other instructors to arrange an appointment. The phone number is 383-7212.

An earlier effort to set up a free service program through the schools in Greater Victoria resulted in a disappointing response of about 600 youngsters being treated, Jacobs says. Using the word-of-mouth method this year, Jacobs says the target is around 1,500 free treatments and cleanings.

The 31 students are coming to the end of their course and the free service gives them a chance to show in a practical way the results of their training.

After June 20, the students will write an examination set by the College of Dental Surgeons. Successful completion will qualify them as certified dental assistants.

After that, there'll be no free service — at least until the next crop of would-be dental assistants is ready.

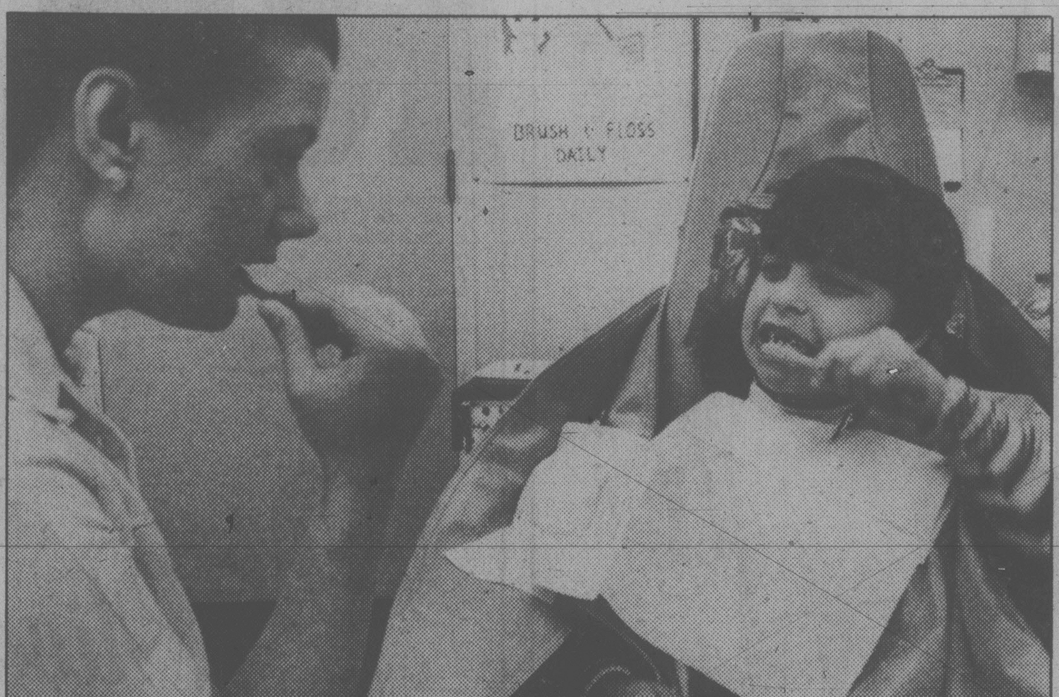
SEVEN-YEAR-OLD Candace Maltby was one of first into the chair for Camosun College dental assistants program for cleaning, above, and instruction on proper brushing by Jean Kinppelberg. Free service runs until June 20 and includes fluoride treatment for youngsters four to 18.



Skin clinic door open

For the first time since it opened two years ago the Victoria General Hospital Psoriasis Clinic has no waiting list.

To date this year some 120 people from Vancouver Island — and individuals from mainland communities such as Chilliwack, Prince Rupert and Whitehorse — have entered the clinic for stays ranging from three to five weeks.

"This compares with 167 patients aged 15 to 75 we had from the opening in July, 1978 to January of this year," said clinic director Dr. H.J. Lewis.

Since the provincial Ministry of Health took over financing of the clinic April 1, the daily rate charged to outpatients has been cut from $5 to $1 — which covers cost of ultra-violet light treatment, ointments and shampoos needed to remove the whitish, adherent scales of psoriasis; heal the reddish base below the scales and control the hereditary condition.

Lewis estimates there are seven to 10 thousand psoriatics on Vancouver Island and that for those whose conditions respond to natural sunlight, now is an ideal time to enter the clinic, gain control of the non-contagious disease, and help maintain a remission with summer sun.

Young people in particular — those who are most self-conscious and suffer most psychologically, he said — would benefit from visits to the clinic in between winding up school for the year and embarking on jobs or travel for the summer.

"It is often very difficult reaching these kids," he told the Times. "A good many of them labor under their lack of awareness and the ignorance of others on what psoriasis is all about — mainly that it is contagious or that they are doing something wrong to have it."

While it is anticipated the clinic will eventually extend its hours to 8 p.m., it now runs 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. with patients checking in each morning and out again after a day's treatment.

Lewis said while all outpatients are expected to bring their own lunches, Victoria area people have the advantage over out-of-towners who must scramble to find accommodation. Eventually, he said, it is hoped a fully-equipped residence for up-Island patients will be established.

Information on referrals by family physicians and treatment schedules may be obtained by telephoning the clinic at 388-7931.

Prostate operation won't affect sex

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

My husband definitely needs a prostate operation. He has been told this by two surgeons. He is younger than most men who have this problem.

He is 51. The reason that he won't go in for the operation is because he is sure that his sexual activity will be affected afterwards. His doctors assure him that this is not true, but he inists that he read it is.

Mrs. G.R.

Dear Mrs. R.:

It may well be that your husband is simply using this excuse to avoid coming face to face with the fact that a prostate operation is necessary.

A great deal of confusion exists about the relationship between the prostate gland, sexual activity, potency and the capacity to have children.

Sexual activity is rarely affected by the removal of the prostate gland. In the absence of any complications during the surgery, it is not considered to be of any concern.

The prostate glands themselves do not produce the sperm cells. Therefore, the capacity to have children need not be affected.

Some men feel that this operation is a threat to their masculinity, and therefore delay having it done. For this reason, surgeons today, aware of the psychological implications of this type of operation, offer important psychological encouragement and reassurance. Occasionally, it is even necessary to have a psychiatrist or psychologist give this added assurance to confused and troubled men.

Dear Doctor:

Is it true that people who drink a lot of alcohol have trouble taking an anesthesia? My husband is not a big drinker, but has been a regular one for many years. He's going in for an operation for a cyst of the spine.

Mrs. F.T.

Dear Mrs. T.:

There was a time when the chronic alcholic presented some problems during anesthesia. The ordinary social drinker usually has no trouble undergoing anesthesia.

The advances made in modern anesthesia are quite remarkable. Before surgery, the anesthesiologist not only makes a careful check of the medical status of the patient, but takes a very meticulous history, just to be sure that there are no hidden risks to be considered. The choice of anesthesia depends on this important information.

Speaking of your health . . . Ambulance drivers on their way to missions of mercy must consider the danger of unnecessary speed.

Family sick eight years

They found out last month that their health problems were caused by carbon monoxide leaking from an improperly installed fireplace.

"We blamed it on psychological things — the stress of work, aging and the dark days of winter since we improved in the summer" — when the furnace and fireplace weren't used, said the father, who asked that the family name not be used.

The mother, a nurse, said that for eight years she was called neurotic because no one could find a physiological reason for her health problems.

"My headaches were out of this world."

She believes the only reason the whole family wasn't asphyxiated was because of electronic air cleaners which kept the air circulating.

"We had them installed because we thought the children's health problems were due to allergies. Had there been dead air in the house where the fumes were trapped we wouldn't be around to tell the story."

The carbon monoxide problem was diagnosed by Marvin Ritz, a city heating and ventilation inspector, while checking the family's furnace.

The leak resulted because one of two flues in the chimney had collapsed. A ceramic tube which should have taken smoke up the stack was a pile of rubble at the bottom of the chimney. Furnace combustion gases, instead of escaping out the chimney, were seeping into the other flue, which was also damaged, and then into the house.

"The guy who put in that fireplace obviously knew nothing about building fireplaces," said Harry Morstead, a consultant with the Centre for Research and Development in Masonry.

"The flues were completely unsupported even though the Alberta building code regulations say every flue must be surrounded by three inches of solid masonry," Morstead said.

"Any time flue tiles are just stacked on top of one another you have a very dangerous situation."

Soy protein skirts an allergy to milk

Milk — the perfect food. Or so some people seem to think. Milk is, of course, an excellent source of protein, calcium, riboflavin, and vitamins A and D. However, there are some people who don't drink milk because they can't digest the lactose in milk or they're allergic to the protein.

Some time ago, we discussed the problem of lactose intolerance. We pointed out that lactose could be digested in the milk so that it would not cause cramps, bloating or any of the other undesirable symptoms that lactose intolerant people suffer. The digestion is done simply by adding a product called LactAid.

Now LactAid is available in liquid form. Four to five drops will remove 70 per cent of the lactose in a quart of milk in 24 hours. If you double the amount of LactAid, more than ninety per cent will be digested.

If you are in a hurry, speed up the process by heating the milk to 33 degrees (90 degrees) for two hours. Chill and use the milk soon to prevent possible spoilage.

The treated milk can be used in cooking in the same way regular milk is used. And LactAid works in most types of milk (whole, skim, low-fat, canned or reconstituted powdered). It doesn't work in buttermilk which is too sour. LactAid also works in cream and baby or dietary formulas, too.

Lists of suppliers of LactAid can be obtained by writing the Allergy Information Association, 25 Poynter Drive, Weston, Ontario, M9V 1K8.

Other people are forced to avoid milk and milk products, not because of the lactose, but because of the protein in milk. They are simply allergic to it. Milk allergy can develop in babies, children and adults alike. Babies that have it cannot have milk formulas, but they are given formulas which use soy protein. Since soy protein is a high quality protein, the babies grow just as well as if they were getting regular milk.

Adults who are allergic to milk might also consider using the soy products which are available in many Chinese grocery stores. These include soybean milk and bean curd (also knows as tofu or dow fu). The protein in these products is very good. They also contain calcium and therefore provide this valuable nutrient that you normally get by drinking milk.

The soy products contain less sugar than milk and the sugar in them is not lactose. Therefore, these products are also great for people who havtuble withlatose itolerance.

Diabetics take note! Soy milk and curd can even be incorporated into diabetic diets. One-half cup of unsweetened soy milk equals one milk exchange. One-half block or 70 grams of soybean curd (plus one-half cup of vegetable A) also equals one milk exchange.

In an earlier article on tofu or bean curd, we mentioned that you could make it at home. It seems that many people want to try, and we've had a lot of requests for a recipe.

Check the followingources — Kitchen Talk, Dominion Stores consumer information service at 605 Rogers Road, Toronto, (416) 652-2454, Thora Dolan will send you a recipe. MSG 'safe' but restraint urged

WASHINGTON (AP) — The food additive monosodium glutamate appears to be safe, but food processors should try and limit its use because many people have temporary reactions to the chemical, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration said Wednesday.

An FDA scientific review panel found that MSG, a widely-used flavor enhancer, presents no hazard to adults at present levels of use.

"But the committee said it still thought it would be wise for manufacturers of processed food to show restraint in adding MSG because many people have reactions to it, though they appear to be harmless," said FDA spokesman Emil Corwin.

The Glutamate Association, an industry group, said the new evaluation confirms extensive international research showing the additive is safe. But the assocation said the panel's suggestion of restraining MSG use in processed foods is inconsistent with its safety finding.

Noting that other foods cause similar reactions to sensitive people, the association said that "if contraints, though unjustified, are to be placed on MSG, consistency would call for a great number of things we eat to be given similar treatment."

The MSG reactions the FDA panel was concerned with sometimes are called the Chinese restaurant syndrome, because relatively large amounts of MSG often are used in Chinese food. The effects include headache, a burning sensation in the neck and forearms, tightness in the chest and neck, flushing and a feeling of pressure behind the eyes.

MSG is an amino acid — a constituent of protein — that enhances the perceived flavor of foods, particularly those low in natural MSG. Foods naturally high in MSG and related compounds include tomatoes, fruit, cheese and mushrooms.

Scientists are not sure how MSG works, but they suspect it might increase nerve impulses responsible for perception of flavors.

The average adult has about 10 grams of MSG-related compounds in his or her body that have been naturally synthesized from proteins. Industry estimates that the average daily intake of added MSG by adults in this country is about one-third of a gram.

Testing stress

Armed with a computer, two provincial health researchers find that 18 per cent of Greater Victorian adults are "at risk" with some mental problem.

By NORMAN GIDNEY

"Job getting you down? Friends turned hostile? Lonely and isolated in the big city? Can't get along with people?

"Don't head for the mental health clinic. Fill out this questionnaire instead. We'll run it through the computer and see what diagnosis the machine comes up with."

The financial crunch in health care hasn't gotten that severe yet, but the scenario is not too farfetched. Questionnaires are a tried and tested tool which psychologists have used for many years.

But they're getting a new application in a project organized by two provincial health department researchers. Don Fernandez and Bill Norton of the ministry's applied research unit last fall sent out some 1,800 "lifestyle questionnaires" to a cross-section of residents of Greater Victoria. Statistician Ron Benson helped analyze the answers.

It was oriented toward stress-related problems, as stress is more and more the suspected agent in a whole range of mental and physical problems.

From the answers to the questions (some samples: Do you make new friends? Do you get in trouble with the law? Are you bothered by your sexual thoughts? Have you been contacted by a collection agency?) they compiled a psychological profile of Greater Victoria adults.

Detailed results are not yet available, but the principal finding from the 844 usable surveys returned was that 18 per cent of Victorians were "at risk" because of some mental problem.

Norton says that figure means there are some 600 severely disturbed families in the capital regional district, about 2,400 people.

"We would have expected more. Maybe we've been reading the newspapers too much."

"It seems what you have in Victoria is people who are reasonably OK or are really upset," says Fernandez.

The figure is a bit lower than the generally accepted estimates made by other means of the level of mental problems in society, although by some definitions and in some cities it's very high. Midtown Manhattan was the subject of a famous study which found that nearly everybody had some mental problem. General professional estimates are from 20 to 25 per cent.

Using a an extremely broad definition of mental health problems, Norton and Fernandez described the problems of the 18 per cent of Victorians identified as suffering some mental disorder: they ranged from "mild life stress" such as job dissatisfaction and financial pressures to more severe conditions. Most were considered to present some problems to society and the mental health professionals.

The project reflected the trend of the last decade in the mental health field to define mental problems in their social contexts.

Fernandez put it this way: "If you're a hermit, you can be as crazy as you like. It's only a problem when you move to town."

The 18 per cent of Victorians identified in the survey had "reasonably disruptive personal problems," meaning, for example, they were in conflict with authority figures, didn't like crowds, suffered depression, were slowing down in their activities and interaction with others.

"A little of that is normal," says Fernandez. "They aren't really a problem until they become socially disruptive."

Someone may like to scream his head off periodically. As long as he doesn't do it at work or outside his house at two on the morning, it's not a problem that bothers anyone else.

"I guess in some ways it comes down to determining what is socially acceptable behavior in various contexts. That's a bit of the approach we take — it's a socially defined problem."

That's not denying there may be some biological causes of some severe mental conditions, Fernandez says.

The survey information is to be used to help plan the development of health programs and allocate staff where they're needed, not to send out the men in white coats to individual homes or neighborhoods.

"For example, if there appeared to be a major need for service related to family problems we would use this information to hire people with appropriate skills as opposed, say, to someone who deals mainly with adult problems," the two researchers said in a covering letter to recipients of the questionnaire.

It's what people in health care call needs assessment. Caught between increasingly restricted budgets and citizens' organizations and health professionals making demands on the government for more services, civil servants are having to devise better ways of establishing priorities than the squeaky wheel gets the grease.

"The services are being gobbled up and we can only buy so much service," says Norton.

"We're trying to get away from the politics in planning services. One of the reasons it got funded was it's never been done before."

The analysis of the results hasn't yet extended to a breakdown of the nine areas which the four core municipalities were divided into for the survey, and the researchers haven'y matched up the problems uncovered with the present services available.

But Norton and Fernandez are confident that the survey results can be considered an accurate picture of general mental health problems in Greater Victoria. They will be able to use them to examine services provided by the Capital Regional District and see if they're meeting needs.

)One surprising element of the survey was the low percentage of family-related mental problems — only 1½ per cent — when generally some 30 per cent of the cases handled by mental health centres are family-oriented.

The researchers suspect a masking effect in their questionnaire, which had to be answered by an adult. Children were not part of the survey, and an adult answering for himself wouldn't have revealed a problem with another member of the family.

The B.C. Health Care Research Foundation, a quasi-government agency recently established by the province to provide funds for research in this field, provided $26,000 for the pilot project which paid for computer time and hired two students who helped distribute the questionnaire and tabulate the results.

Fernandez says it's not the first attempt at rational planning of health services, but it is the most sophisticated they know of. They spent two years devising and testing the questionnaire. It took so much time because there were very few similar studies described in the professional literature and no one had ever validated such a survey before. Norton and Fernandez tested theirs on people who identified themselves as mentally ill.

Their questionnaire was given to individuals who came in to mental health clinics around the province — people who decided on their own they needed help — and the survey was able to diagnose their problems with 82 per cent accuracy.

That is, eight times out of 10 using only the answers to the questions provided by the patients, their diagnosis agreed with the staff psychiatrist's.

Animal care is 'on the level'

That means insulin shots, daily urine tests and change in diet. But the patient was unimpressed.

The patient, Puffy, is a nine-year-old cat.

Puffy's Edmonton master was given detailed instructions on how to care for the cat, and given assurances that Puffy's condition can be controlled.

But later, when her master tried to fill a prescription for a syringe to give the shots, the pharmacist reached for the phone.

"Is this on the level?" he asked the veterinarian. "Is it really for a cat?"

Meanwhile, on an acreage on the other side of the city, a somewhat larger patient was confronted with a serious medical problem. Blackie, a show horse, had ulcers. Along with humans who suffer from ulcers, he was put on a bland diet.

If you think pet problems sound a lot like people problems, you're right. Consider some feline ailments: heart murmurs, common cold, rotten teeth, tumors, glaucoma and cataracts.

DR. DANIEL TORTORA, a New York animal psychiatrist, comments on the state of mind plaguing some of man's best friends. Tortora says he has successfully treated 1,495 out of 1,500 dogs with personality problems ranging from "terrorist" behavior to hang-ups about telephones.

High altitude sickness in cattle, muscular dystrophy in chickens, hemophilia in dogs and mongolism in chimpanzees are just a few more of the medical conditions we share with animals.

"The names of the diseases are the same, the drugs are the same," said Dr. Louise Tracz, a young Edmonton veterinarian who specializes in cats. "A lot of the equipment is the same, and the tests."

"Nowadays if a horse breaks a leg, depending on the kind of fracture he has, there are facilities for repair," said Dr. Margaret Mitchell, a veterinarian who spends much of her time working on horses.

"Ten years ago, a horse with a broken leg was shot."

Combined with veterinary advances are signs of a growing willingness by owners to go to great lengths, and cost, to maintain their pet's health.

Animal medical care is expensive. Extracting a cat's tooth can cost $25, mending a dog's fractured leg can run to $150 and just the anesthetic for a horse can cost an equal amount.

In some clinics, leg fractures and even tendon transplants are performed on horses.

The surgery is quite expensive," said Mitchell, noting that it can range from $1,200 to $2,500. "But if the horse does recover, it can be quite gratifying for the owner."

Dr. Mike Person, president of the Edmonton small animal veterinarians' association, said he expects a medical insurance program will be started for pets eventually. One was attempted several years ago but fell through because of abuses.

In the meantime, veterinarians advise that a good diet, exercise and basic medical care are the best ways for owners to keep their bills down.

"Table scraps are the number-one problem I see in small animals," said Mitchell, adding that such a diet can lead to too much fat, gastric upsets and ulcers. She recommends dry dogfood, with additional supplements sometimes required.

For cats, Tracz recommends a recipe approved by the National Research Council in the United States. It's a mixture of cottage cheese, dried milk, cooked liver, oatmeal, corn oil or lard, brewer's yeast and cod liver oil, introduced gradually.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological Forecast for Friday, May 16, 1980
By Sydney Omarr

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Restlessness should be properly interpreted — you will be eager, alert, raring to answer and ask questions. Cycle is favorable — you will overcome red tape restrictions. Relative, usually reluctant to agree with you, can become valuable ally.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your ideas could result in ring of cash register. Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius persons figure prominently. Emphasis on payments, collections, personal possessions, ability to evaluate and consolidate gains. You are due to hit jackpot!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Family member requires tender, loving care — tea and sympathy. Know it, act accordingly. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio natives play significant roles. Family member has constructive suggestion connected with beautification of surroundings. Be receptive!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Study Gemini message — insist on "proper hearing." Take nothing for granted, see as is, not merely through haze of wishes, romantic ideals. Accent on backstage, behind scenes, courtroom maneuvers, confidential data requiring "discreet" handling.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Emphasis on involvement, added responsibility, a special commitment and unique dealings with Cancer, Capricorn individuals. Cycle moves up and you are making valuable contacts. Member of opposite sex has "designs" on you.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): One in authority helps you decide on what material requires special scrutiny. Speed up techniques. Let go of past; a more modern procedure will enhance prestige and chances for success. Aries, Libra persons figure prominently.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Good lunar aspect coincides now with journey, communication, finding ways to express and distribute your own point of view. Originality now will pay dividends. Know it and act in a daring, innovative manner. Leo, Aquarius individuals play prominent roles.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Distinguish between what is real as contrasted to counterfeit. Emphasis on money promises, romantic diversions and settling a legal dispute. Cancer, Leo, Aquarius persons figure prominently. Member of opposite sex "makes a pass."

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Gain overall view; perceive potential, accept social invitation, display versatility, humor and artistic talents. Emphasis on law, publicity, partnership and opportunity to make a "special person" happy. Another Sagittarian and a Gemini play key roles.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Dig deep for information — reject handouts, substitutes or flimsy reports. Steady pace achieves objective — know it, avoid sensationalism and eschew get-rich-quick schemes. Aquarian will show you the way to increase income potential.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Accent on creative endeavors, intensified relationship, speculation, children and green light for travel and writing project. Gemini, Virgo, Capricorn persons figure prominently. In games or contests, stick with number 5.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Home area is emphasized; special purchase related to comfort and luxury could be on agenda. Family member makes conciliatory gesture. Older associate talks about basic values and lends benefit of experience. If alert, you pave way for future profit.

IF MAY 16 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are introspective, sensitive, prescient and have prophetic dreams. Pisces, Virgo persons play important roles in your life. If you avoid scattering your forces, this could be a banner year. You have recently overcome an "emotional wound." Now, doors of opportunity open, social activity accelerates and your ability to communicate brings accolades from various sources. In June, you are rid of a burden. You could fall in love and you are due for a unique honor. In July, you begin a project, creative juices are activated and you are complimented for being independent, innovative and original.

You are what you order

By MIKE FEINSILBER

PALO ALTO, Calif. (AP) — Folks who eat lunch at the Faculty Club at Stanford University get more than a meal. They get a lecture from the menu, want it or not.

Better settle for the artichoke casserole — it's only F-400-C.

Only in California — and only on the campus of a high-powered, heavy-thinking, prestigious university — would the menu offer such a nudge, giving you a poke in the conscience when you want to eat something unhealthy.

It is not unusual for restaurant menus to offer waist-watcher plates or even to whisper the caloric content of dishes.

But here the menu goes beyond that, rating each dish relative to the others.

So a dish with two F's would be twice as bad for you as one with one F. An FFF dish would be even more hazardous to your health and an FFFF dish would be a dietary time-bomb.

Scientists suspect that saturated fats are a culprit in heart and blood vessel disease and strokes; cholesterol is linked with those ailments, too, as well as hardening of the arteries.

The menu was instigated by Stanford professor Ron Bracewell, a radio astronomer who, when president of the faculty club, became concerned about whether his colleagues were eating well.

There was a rumor that medical school faculty members were boycotting the club because the food was too rich for their blood.

So Bracewell went to the Stanford heart disease prevention program, which, with the help of a dietician, came up with the rating plan.

Has it changed faculty eating habits?

The heart disease prevention program says it cannot discern much of a change, but Mario Scherrer, manager of the club, said diners ate 125 hamburgers (FF-900-CCC) a week in 1973 but only 26 in a recent week.

"It sounds like a good idea, but I haven't made any decisions based on it," said Kenneth Harker, a senior physics research associate.

His fellow diner, Fred Crawford, was having an F-900-C meal, soup and salad, but he said: "There are days when I have a Frenchburger (that's a cheeseburger on French bread — an awesome FFFF-1200-CCCC) and I'm still here to tell the tale."

But student waiters at the club say the professors are becoming more conscious of what they're eating than they might want to admit.

Dr. John Farquar, a professor of medicine, says the menu is bound to alter habits, even if people aren't aware of it.

"We know that changing human behavior is more difficult than putting labels on a menu. But this is a good beginning. It gets stored away in your brain — sort of an environmental cue."

Self-peek not pretty

By KERI SWEETMAN

Perspectives Canada III, third in a series of massive Statistics Canada studies snooping into the way we look, eat, drink, work and even how often we make love, is now out.

Each costs about $50,000 for the printing alone. Editor David Brusegard won't say what the total cost of each project is but adds: "It's well worth the money."

In fact, the first two were so popular, "they were purchased in droves," he says. They sold almost 15,000 copies between them and hopes are even higher for the 1980 version.

The latest is crammed with everything you never wanted to know about yourself.

For $9.95 ($11.95 outside Canada), its 312 pages and 323 charts will describe how unhealthy you are, how little you exercise, how much energy you waste and will top it off by comparing your habits to those of your neighbors south of the border.

—More than 1.6 million Canadian adults are grossly obese and the problem is most acute among elderly women (almost 40 per cent).

—Aside from making us ugly, those extra pounds are contributing to a multitude of health problems, especially heart disease, responsible for 50 per cent of all Canadian deaths.

—There are 624,000 Canadian alcoholics and among those who don't qualify for that status, the average Canadian adult consumes 99 litres of booze each year. As a result, deaths from cirrhosis of the liver have jumped 250 per cent in the last decade.

—Although somewhat fewer Canadians are smoking, deaths from lung cancer have increased 177 per cent since 1967. In the illegal weed category, 22 per cent of Canadian students reported using marijuana.

—And to make you really fear for your life, the cheery news is that suicide, mental illness, child abuse and murder are all on the upswing.

Rehabilitation sought

EDMONTON (CP) — Victims of burns have formed a self-help group to ease the problems of going back into society.

Peter Clark, who suffered third-degree burns to 30 per cent of his body after his truck touched off a gas explosion last year, said victims will also put out a newsletter for their 34-member Alberta Burn Rehabilitation Society.

LOSE 5-14 LBS. IN NEXT TWO WEEKS WITH THE HELP OF THE no nonsense DIET

In May of 1979 Natures own no nonsense diet was introduced to British Columbians and Albertans through the Prince Health Food chain. Within weeks they were sold out and by the end of July thousands of people had lost weight the no nonsense way.

Unlike most diets to have come along this one is not dying out, but gaining greater momentum all the time. The reason for this phenomenal growth lies inthe fact that those people who have tried the diet have gotten positive results. For example I know of one particular young lady who has been overweight nearly all of her life. She wanted desperately to lose 25 lbs., and tried every possible means over the last two years. She exercised, joined clubs and went to monthly meetings. All to no avail. After reading about the no nonsense diet, she decided to give it a try before throwing in the towel. It worked. Within a month she lost 23 lbs., within two more weeks she lost another 10 lbs. She is so ecstatic about this diet that she preaches it to anyone who will listen and has most of her friends on it.

The product is a dieter's dream; two tablespoons in a glass of partially skimmed milk is equal in nutrition to a complete meal. But without all those nasty little calories. It has all the essential amino acids, and Vitamins and Minerals in a delicious powder base. The no nonsense formula comes in two flavours, luscious chocolate and tasty vanilla.

Vitamin A
Thiamin
Choline
Iodine
Potassium
Vitamin E
Riboflavin
Calcium Magnesium
Manganese
Vitamin C
Niacin B6, B12
Phosphorous
Copper
Sodium
Vitamin D
Folid Acid Biotin
Iron
Zinc
d-Panothenic Acid

This is a wonderful diet because you are dealing with natural foods and not drugs, consequently it is safe and very healthy. A lot of people after going on this diet, have noticed remarkable improvement in their hair, skin and nails.

The no nonsense diet is available at these and other leading Retailers:

Margaret Hallett
with the latest collection of her fine water color paintings

The popularity of Miss Hallett's water colors has increased with each showing she has presented, and her works are now in many of the finest private collections. The artist's deft use of her medium, the delicate tracery of backgrounds — particularly in the rendering of foliage — gives her landscapes a dreamlike quality, both in color and form a quality the Irish call "Fey". This artistry can be acquired only through many years of working with water colors, and a latent talent for this approach to the medium. Miss Hallett displays her versatility, with paintings that range through seascapes with straining full-rigged sailing ships to the softly weathered colors of an aging barn set in a western landscape. Eaton's Gallery of Fine Arts invites you to meet Margaret Hallett in person, one day only, Friday, May 16th, 3:00 p.m. to 4:00 p.m. Miss Hallett's work will be available for viewing and purchase during the week of May 16th to May 24th.

EATON'S

It appears end is coming soon for Bani-Sadr

By JONATHAN RANDAL
Washington Post

TEHRAN — Barring an unforeseen improvement in fortunes unusual in Iranian revolutionary politics, President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr looks like a spent force.

For the United States the negative implications are clear, if not new. The long humiliation of the leading advocate of a rapid settlement of the crisis with the United States means that the 53 American hostages are likely to remain here until the continuing power struggle has been decided.

That could well last far beyond the convening next month of the new parliament to which Ayatollah Khomeini has entrusted the fate of the hostages.

The latest in a series of setbacks for Bani-Sadr was his failure to impose a new government before the convening of the parliament, which is certain to be dominated by his right-wing clerical rivals of the Islamic Republican Party.

But the new element that emerged from the fiasco of his abortive pre-emptive coup against the Islamic Republicans was his inability to rally support from hitherto neutral or friendly forces who also oppose the clerical party.

Now poised to stake leadership claims is a group including former navy commander Rear Adm. Ahmad Madani, Defence Minister Mustafa Ali Chamran, Revolutionary Council spokesman Hassan Habibi, Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh and former deputy prime minister Sadegh Tabatabai.

Their refusal to co-operate with Bani-Sadr was not motivated by his barely constitutional manoeuvre — some friends privately even called it a "trick" — aimed at undercutting the Islamic Republican Party's working parliamentary majority.

Rather it was based on cold calculation, according to insiders.

As tough, pragmatic, even cynical political realists, the members of the emerging group have no faith in the effectiveness of the utopian policies of the president and his radical young advisers sometimes known collectively as the "Stanford mafia" because some were educated at that American university.

In what some cynics took as Bani-Sadr's political epitaph, the president wrote in his newspaper Islamic Revolution that a recent, apparently governmented-conducted opinion poll showed a "patent tendency" for a prime minister representing "security, order and moderation."

In the present situation, as Bani-Sadr made clear, that reflected a growing public reaction to the Islamic Republican Party and mullahs in politics.

The emerging group certainly thinks of itself as filling that bill and has the advantage of relative political virginity in the case of some of its more prominent members such as Chamran and Madani.

Whatever divided them in the past, today they share a common right-wing, modernist, anti-clerical view of the revolution that pleases the important bazaar traders fed up with Bani-Sadr's nationalizations and other radical economic policies.

Still unclear is whether they have any real chance of prevailing or if they will be swept aside by yet another group.

That has been the fate of Mehdi Bazargan, the first post-revolutionary prime minister and now seems likely to be Bani-Sadr's.

Less than four months after winning the presidency with 75 per cent of the vote, he seems condemned to largely ceremonial functions in the future with real power exercised through a prime minister blessed by Khomeini.

From a narrowly American viewpoint it seems to make little difference which group comes out on top as long as Iran's continuing paralysis is ended.

The election of the new parliament at best has concentrated the minds of all parties and made them realize how beside the point is their talk of putting the hostages on trial, or even selling them back to the United States.

For analysts are convinced that Khomeini's official desire for parliament to settle the hostage crisis is disingenous. The inexperienced legislators may well follow any demonstrably strong lead.

As has been made increasingly clear ever since the)embassy was seized Nov. 4, the American hostages are pawns in Iran's yet undecided revolutionary power struggle.

Once the power struggle is ended, analysts are convinced, the hostages' ordeal will too, but not before.

Sanctions unlikely to work miracles

Times News Services

TEHRAN — The lineups outside food stores and skyrocketing unemployment are vivid proof that Iran is suffering from months of political and economic conflict with the United States and its allies.

There is a chronic shortage of spare parts for cars and machinery, and much of Iran's military equipment is idle because of lack of spare parts.

On the surface, this would seem fruitful ground for a Western European move to force quick release of the 53 Americans being held as hostages by Iran by imposing new trade sanctions this weekend.

But don't count on it. Few observers believe the European sanctions due to be imposed this weekend will have an immediate impact.

Iran's revolutionary government draws most of its support from the working classes and peasants, who are less affected by the economic downturn than the middle class.

The Iranian revolution is still very much alive, despite an unemployment rate of about 30 per cent and an inflation rate officially at 20 per cent and unofficially estimated at 50 per cent.

Also, Iranian leaders are looking for new oil customers and trading partners. Soviet-bloc countries are flocking to Tehran with trade offers and the government has reached oil agreements with Poland and Czechoslovakia and is talking about oil and natural gas sales to the Soviet Union.

Meanwhile, the U.S. has denied a claim by Iran President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr that 96 armed U.S. saboteurs and assassins and 19 Iranian exiles are on the loose after being landed by helicopter in the mountainous Bakhtiari tribal region about 400 kilometres southwest of Tehran.

And U.S. Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie declared his personal opposition Wednesday to any further resort to military action to free the hostages.

Two Americans held by Libyans for spying

United Press International

Libyan authorities have arrested two American oil company employees and the local director of Italy's Alitalia airlines for spying in the latest episode of strongman Moammar Khadafy's diplomatic war with Europe and the United States.

The state-owned Libyan news agency confirmed Wednesday a State Department report that Americans Michael Price and Roger Frey were taken into custody by "The Popular Committee for Justice in Tripoli ... for engaging in spying."

In Rome, the Italian Foreign Ministry confirmed that Alitalia station chief in Libya, Franco Corsi, 42, was arrested April 27 and charged with suspected espionage.

No details of the charges were provided and the State Department would only say the Americans were "employees of an oil company."

Monet nets 7,000 times its last auction price

NEW YORK (AP) — A painting by Claude Monet has been sold at auction for 7,000 times more than its price when last on the market as a wave of art purchases netted $50 million here in three days, breaking almost all records for artists of the impressionist and modern periods.

The Sotheby Parke Bernet auction galleries on Wednesday night sold $7.5 million worth of paintings and sculptures by Degas, Monet, Picasso, Matisse and other artists.

The top price paid Wednesday was $570,000 by a private New York collector for Monet's Argenteuil: Flowers By The River Bank. The painting had been sold in 1952 by the same dealer for $8,500.

Financial ruin in bridge debris

Times News Services

TAMPA, Fla. — Florida Gov. Bob Graham issued a disaster declaration for Tampa Bay counties losing $50 million a day because of last week's Sunshine Skyway Bridge collision, in the first step toward getting federal funds to rebuild the bridge.

Graham's declaration Wednesday of a "state of disaster emergency" opens the way for the state to obtain $60 million in federal funds for reconstruction of the 150-foot-high bridge that was rammed by a freighter, killing at least 35 people.

Rubble from the bridge is blocking ship traffic to the Port of Tampa, although some limited traffic has resumed.

Meanwhile, as a Marine Board of Investigation inquiry into the collision continued Wednesday, the body of the 35th victim of the bridge collapse was found in Tampa Bay.

Trust or bloodbath, PM says as S. Korean rioting worsens

SEOUL (UPI) — More than 100,000 South Korean university students battled riot police today in fighting that raged into the night in Seoul and provincial towns in the worst anti-government demonstrations in 16 years.

Police estimated 70,000 students from 33 universities in Seoul fought running battles with police who fired tear gas and swung clubs. Another 30,000 students turned out in provincial towns in demands for democratic reforms and an end to martial law.

The demonstrations in Seoul turned more violent at nightfall, and one report said 30 people were injured.

Witnesses said students commandeered a city bus in one incident, ordered the passengers off and ran down four police with it.

In another clash, the students hurled a Molotov cocktail and set a police car on fire. The demonstrators also tried to seize three police buses parked near the city hall.

The three days of street violence prodded Prime Minister Shin Hyon-Hwack to issue a statement calling on the students to refrain from further disruptions and to trust the government.

Shin indicated the government would work with parliament and speed up political reforms as demanded by the students, but he warned that authorities will lose patience if the students carry the protests too far.

"There still is no change in the government plan to adopt a new constitution and hold a presidential election early next year to turn over power to a newly elected government," he said. The students, however, have been demanding that the transfer to democratic rule come much earlier.

Before starting the violent street protests, students gathered in front of the Seoul Railway Station in a downtown area, split into two groups and marched toward the heart of the city.

The current series of street demonstrations are the worst riots since 1964, when students throughout South Korea staged massive demonstrations for three months, nearly toppling the government of late President Park Chung-Hee. Park put down the protests sparked by his attempts to normalize relations with Japan, Korea's former colonial ruler, by declaring martial law.

As army helicopters hovered over the embattled streets of Seoul, a ranking government official said authorities are considering accepting most of the students' demands including the lifting of six months of martial law and speedy political development.

Police said students from at least 20 schools started converging on the railway station plaza in the early afternoon; they broke through police cordons and gathered on the square, swelling to 50,000-strong by late afternoon.

While the Seoul students were moving, about 2,000 students in the provincial town of Kwangju 273 kilometres south of Seoul fought riot police with rocks in violent street actions, reports reaching Seoul said.

Wednesday, 285 people — including 258 policemen, 25 students and two civilians — were injured, with 39 of them hospitalized in Seoul, when about 30,000 students from 19 universities in Seoul hit the streets.

The police report said a total of 675 people, including 599 students and 76 civilians, were arrested Wednesday.

Meanwhile, American troops manning a United Nations Command guardpost in the frontier region exchanged fire with a group of North Korean intruders early today, U.S. military officials said.

No U.S. soldiers were hurt, but it was not known if any North Koreans were injured.

It was the second such incident in three days in an area manned by U.S. troops guarding the truce village of Panmunjom, 56 km north of Seoul.

Scientists kick around theory sun, moon to trigger eruption

VANCOUVER, Wash. (AP) — Geologists studying the volcanic activity of Mount St. Helens are divided over a theory which suggests a lava eruption is possible May 21 because of the combined tidal pull of the moon and the sun.

Donald Mullineaux, a U.S. Geological Survey (USGS) volcano hazards specialist, said Wednesday the recently advanced theory is feasible.

It was advanced by Al Eggers, a University of Puget Sound geologist, who says the combined gravitational pull of the sun and the moon when the two are aligned might upset the delicate balance between the pressure of magma within the mountain and resisting rock.

"He's talking about the idea that earth tides affect volcanic eruptions," Mullineaux said. "There are places in the world where this is observed."

However, Mullineaux added that such a key time occurred in early April without any effect on the mountain.

"We had people watching for that and weren't able to make any correlation," Mullineaux said.

Another USGS geologist, Dave Johnston, said earlier this week that while there is a correlation between earthquakes on the volcano and the gravitational pull of the sun and moon, there is no positive correlation between eruptions of steam and ash and tidal action.

Airborne observers reported the volcano was erupting steam and ash again Wednesday after a quiet period Tuesday afternoon.

Greenpeace found guilty

LONDON (CP) — The conservation group Greenpeace and three of its directors were fined a total of £800 (about $2,160) in the London High Court today.

Greenpeace UK directors Allan Thornton and Peter Wilkinson and International Greenpeace council director David McTaggart were found guilty of impeding the navigation of a ship carrying nuclear waste to Britain from Japan.

Each director was fined £100 (about $270) for their involvement in an incident last March.

The bidding:

East	South	West	North

Opening lead — queen of spades.

Here is another example of how important it is to plan the play of the hand as a whole. East wins the spade lead with the ace, returns the eight, and the problem is to find South's best method of play. The immediate question is whether to duck the eight or go up with the king, but this cannot sensibly be answered without looking well beyond what to do at trick two.

Before coming to a decision, South counts his winners. He has eight of them — a spade, a heart, two diamonds and four clubs.

He then looks for ways and means of gaining a ninth trick. Two stand out. One is a heart finesse, hoping East was dealt the king. If the finesse succeeds, South has ten tricks; if it fails and West started with five spades, South goes down one.

The other way is to rely on a diamond finesse. This method is certain to produce a ninth trick if declarer guesses which way to take the two-way finesse. The objection to this method of play is that declarer may run into trouble if he guesses wrong.

But there is a third possibility — much less evident, yet highly likely to succeed. It avoids either finesse and compels West to yield the ninth trick.

South wins the spade return at trick two, plays the A-J and another club, and exits with the nine of spades. When West cashes his spades, South discards a club and a heart while dummy discards a diamond and a heart.

West now has no choice but to lead a heart or a diamond, thus pesenting South with his ninth trick. Declarer incurs no risk with this classy method of play. He forces West to do his work for him.

Experts expect major Pacific rim quake

By WALTER SULLIVAM
New York Times

MOHONK LAKE, N.Y. — Large earthquakes are predicted for several zones around the rim of the Pacific Ocean.

Specialists in earthquake prediction from 12 countries, meeting here to discuss the most recent findings, were told of growing evidence for what is already being called "the Tokai earthquake." Its predicted magnitude will be devastating, about 8 on the Richter scale, according to Dr. Katsuhiko Ishibashi of the International Institute of Seismology and Earthquake Engineering in Japan.

Scientists said the earthquakes were most likely within the next few years. The prediction depends on the so-called seismic gap method, which has been reliable in the past, although imprecise on time. Similar predictions have been made for such places as sections of the San Andreas fault in California and the west coast of South America and Mexico, where an earthquake near Oaxaca was correctly predicted last year.

Ishibashi and other Japanese scientists said that precautionary measures were being taken, including reinforcement of structures that would be vulnerable in an earthquake.

He said the highway between Tokyo and Kyoto would be "completely damaged." Others said the quake was expected to sever the famous high-speed rail line between Tokyo and Osaka, which goes through an almost unbroken zone of industrial and residential areas.

The Japanese have saturated the region with instruments to detect such premonitory signs as foreshocks. According to Dr. Lynn R. Sykes, chairman of the conference's organizing committee, it is the world's most densely instrumented region.

Dr. Sykes is with the Lamont-Doherty Geological Observatory of Columbia University, which is the host for the meeting at the Mohonk Mountain House in Ulster County, about four miles northwest of New Paltz.

Sykes and his colleagues made the Alaskan prediction. In March they similarly forecast a major quake for the Yakataga Gap, where the coast of Alaska turns abruptly from northeast to southeast.

It has been established that the Pacific Basin constitutes a vast rigid plate that is moving northwesterly relative to surrounding continental areas and island arcs. Because of this motion, the plate descends under the southern rim of Alaska and the Aleutian Islands, and a smaller section of sea floor, the Philippines Plate, descends under southwest Japan. These descending movements produce intermittent quakes in both regions.

From a study of records by early Russian settlers, Sykes said it was possible to determine the quake activity along the Alaskan coast for the last 200 years. The Shumagin Gap has not had a major quake in at least 77 years, he said, whereas the average rupture intervals there have been 50 to 75 years.

Several of Tuesday's reports described the search for signs indicating a possible earthquake. Dr. Kiyoo Mogi of the Earthquake Research Institute of the University of Tokyo has identified a "doughnut" pattern of tremors centered on a spot where a major quake will occur.

Scandal sheet has stars shooting

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Screaming headlines over grainy color photographs — it's another juicy "exclusive" about America's latest celluloid idol.

It's the gossip column-fan magazine school of journalism, catering to public curiosity about private lives of television and film stars. While the stars have rarely liked what's written about them, they've generally chosen to ignore it.

Until now.

Seven entertainers were made angry enough to sue. And they're suing the same publication: the National Enquirer.

Comedians Carol Burnett, Paul Lynde and Phil Silvers, actor Rory Calhoun, TV announcer Ed McMahon and actress Shirley Jones and her husband, Marty Ingels, charge that the Lantana, Fla.-based tabloid, which sells about five million copies a week, published fictional stories about them with reckless disregard for the truth.

Actor Steve McQueen hasn't sued, but he recently had his attorney send a letter to the Enquirer demanding retraction of an article that claimed he was dying of cancer.

J. Richard Allison, corporate secretary for the National Enquirer, declined to comment on any of the lawsuits. But speaking about the Enquirer in general, he said: "The aim of our publication is to present the most accurate story that is possible."

Stories on celebrities must be confirmed by at least two sources and must satisfy the newspaper's legal advisers, he said. "We have never lost a lawsuit."

The acknowledged leader of the star litigants is Carol Burnett. A July trial has been tentatively set for her $5-million libel suit over a gossip column item contending she had a drunken run-in with former secretary of state Henry Kissinger in a Washington restaurant.

Burnett's attorney, Barry Langberg, said she found the item particularly objectionable because she is a non-drinker and has worked publicly to combat alcoholism, an illness that afflicted her parents.

Burnett, who has already spent more than $100,000 in legal fees, said she's determined to follow through on the suit.

Her determination — and success so far — have encouraged other celebrities to pursue their suits.

"I don't know if Shirley and I would have done it if it weren't for Carol," said Marty Ingels.

Ingels and Miss Jones have filed a $20-million damage suit stemming from a full-page Enquirer story saying Ingels' misbehavior was driving his wife to drink.

"I think everybody in my business thinks of it as somewhat of a joke," Jones said. "The only problem is that most other people don't understand that.

Ingels believes many actors haven't filed libel suits because they are afraid of what might come out in court about other aspects of their private lives.

He said others refrain from legal action because they don't want the publicity to give additional life to rumors.

Withdrawal plan just red herring?

Times News Services

MOSCOW — Afghanistan's pro-Moscow government has called for talks with Pakistan and Iran which it said might pave the way for a withdrawal of Soviet forces from its territory. The proposal was dismissed today by U.S. State Secretary Edmund Muskie as "cosmetic and not meaningful."

In a government statement carried by the official Tass news agency, Afghanistan said the Pakistan and Iran would have to give pledges, backed by the United States and the Soviet Union, not to commit hostile acts against Afghanistan.

Muskie said the proposal is aimed at diverting Islamic countries from further condemnation of the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan — and was timed to influence a conference of Islamic states starting Saturday in Pakistan.

The newly-appointed U.S. state secretary is due to meet Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko Friday, and Afghanistan is expected to be high on the agenda.

Meanwhile, White House sources say the U.S. has quietly suggested an Islamic peacekeeping force for Afghanistan that would keep order during and after a Soviet withdrawal.

The force might be drawn from both moderate and some of the more radical Moslem states such as Algeria, the sources said, adding that they did not anticipate the Soviet Union would show much interest in the U.S. peacekeeping force suggestion until:

— Moscow faces the reality that it will require many more troops and engage in much more bloodshed before it can subdue Afghanistan.

— Islamic countries develop much more concern over the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, with a resulting loss of prestige for Moscow.

Detente toast

WARSAW (AP) — Leaders of Warsaw pact countries today ended a two-day meeting with expressions of support for continued detente with the West.

"When millions feel anxiety for the fate of detente . . . , from Warsaw sounds . . . a voice of wisdom and peace," Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev said in a toast after the final session.

Brezhnev and leaders of six other pact countries signed documents of an undisclosed nature, the Polish news agency PAP reported.

Israelis kill 3 Lebanese

TEL AVIV (AP) — Israeli soldiers killed three Palestinian guerrillas who tried to cross the Israeli-Lebanese border on a raid coinciding with Israel's celebration of its capture of Arab East Jerusalem 13 years ago and the 32nd anniversary of Israeli independence.

An army command spokesman said an Israeli patrol intercepted the infiltrators, carrying automatic rifles and grenades, Wednesday night near Kibbutz Hanita, an Israeli collective farm in western Galilee about eight kilometres inland from the Mediterranean.

The army said the guerrillas carried a list of Palestinian guerrillas imprisoned in Israel, indicating they planned to take hostages and demand the release of the prisoners.

In Beirut, the Popular Front said that the guerrilla "suicide squad" stormed a military dormitory in Kibbutz Hanita and killed or wounded dozens of Israelis in a three-hour battle before the Palestinians were killed.

Peace talks to resume

Times News Services

CAIRO — President Anwar Sadat has formed a new cabinet with himself as prime minister to solve Egypt's political and economic problems, and said negotiations on Palestinian autonomy will be resumed.

Sadat, who suspended the talks with Israel and the United States last week because of lack of progress, did not say when the talks would be resumed.

In a speech, Sadat also announced the abolition of martial laws which he said had been in force since 1914 except for a few years, and warned both Moslem and Christian agitators to stop meddling in politics.

Meanwhile, Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin said today Palestinian autonomy talks will continue beyond their May 26 target date and all three negotiating partners — Israel, Egypt and the U.S.— must set a new goal for completing the bargaining.

U.S. bracing for June 16 'gold rush'

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Treasury is bracing for a 1980 gold rush as it prepares to sell half-ounce and one-ounce gold medallions to the public for the first time, starting next month.

Orders for one million of the half-ounce medals, which are expected to cost about $260, will be accepted at U.S. post offices beginning June 16.

The Treasury said it would start taking orders July 1 for 500,000 of the one-ounce medallions, which are expected to sell for about $530.

The prices, pegged to the closing price of gold on the New York Commodity Exchange, will change daily. A premium, expected to be $6 for the half-ounce medallion and $12 for the one-ounce gold piece, will be added to cover production and distribution costs.

Gold sold for $517.80 an ounce at the close of business Monday.

Treasury officials said they expected to sell out their 1980 quota of one million ounces of gold long before the August 30 cutoff date for orders.

In the past, Americans could buy gold from the United States only in the form of 400-ounce bars, which would cost more than $200,000 each at today's market prices.

Gold, which rose to a peak of $800 an ounce late last year, traditionally has been valued by investors in periods of high inflation. Treasury Secretary G. William Miller, however, cautioned recently that gold is a "highly volatile and risky investment."

Each buyer will be limited to three medallions.

The U.S. medals will compete with the South African krugerrand, a coin that had $522 million worth of sales to American customers in 1979. Mexico and Canada each sold more than $100 million worth of coins to Americans last year as well. The American medallions will not be a coin or legal tender, however, although they may be traded in commodity markets.

One factor that may discourage orders is the long delay in delivery times.

Park honors Klondike boom town

WASHINGTON (LAT) — The U.S. National Park Service announced Wednesday the formal establishment of the Klondike Gold Rush National Historical Park, in the area of the 1890s Alaskan gold mining boom town of Skagway.

Creation of the 13,271-acre park was authorized by Congress in 1976, and parts of it have been in operation since the summer of 1977.

900 Jaguars recalled in U.S.

DETROIT (AP) — Jaguar Rover Triumph Inc. announced Wednesday it is recalling 900 Jaguar cars in the U.S. to check fuel filters that might start fires.

The U.S. marketing subsidiary of British Leyland said the cars, all XJ6 Series III models from the 1979 model year, might have fuel filters too near the ignition amplifier.

In "isolated cases" contact between the two might "over a period of time" cause fuel to leak from the filter "with a consequent risk of fire," the company said.

No accidents or injuries have been reported from the problem, which was discovered on one car in Britain.

Kin duped in deep-freeze burial

CHATSWORTH, Calif. (AP) — The lure of life after death proved a trap for the families of nine dead people whose frozen bodies were to be preserved at a cemetery here until they could be revived, says lawyer Michael Worthington.

Instead, the bodies rotted inside their crypts, causing the families disillusionment and grief, he says.

Three families represented by Worthington have filed suit in Los Angeles County Superior Court, seeking $10 million in punitive damages, $500,000 for emotional suffering plus several thousand dollars in expenses.

Worthington says it's a story with elements from science-fiction tales or late-night horror movies about mad scientists.

He believes it was faith in cryogenics — the freezing of bodies for revival in the future when cures are available for fatal diseases — that led families to entrust their deceased loved ones to the now-defunct Cryonics Society of California.

The bodies, including that of eight-year-old Genevieve de la Poterie of Montreal, were to be kept frozen with liquid nitrogen in an underground mausoleum at Oakwood Memorial Park in this Los Angeles County town, in the hopes that someday those people would live again.

But even if cryogenics — or cryonics, as the society dubbed its process — is perfected, these nine people will never be revived.

When investigators opened the tomb in March, instead of a gleaming white-and-steel laboratory, they found badly deteriorated bodies in wooden shipping boxes, Worthington said.

"People will believe in it until it's absolutely proven that they've been defrauded," he said "You cannot shake their confidence. They couldn't live with themselves otherwise."

The families' suit, alleging breach of contract, fraud and negligent misrepresentation, names the former Cryonics Society of California; the affiliated Cryonic Interment Inc.; the two groups' former president, Robert Nelson, and mortician Joseph Klockgether of Buena Park.

"Everyone knew that it was an experimental venture. What happened was that the heirs made promises of a financial nature and they didn't keep them and the society had to shut off the care system."

John Hager, a Los Angeles lawyer representing Klockgether, said his client was simply performing services as a mortician for Nelson and "in many cases, he wasn't even paid for what he did."

Los Angeles Police Department investigator George Hawes said police are not involved in the matter because the families who are suing live out-of-state.

The purported possibilities of cryonics began attracting interest in the early 1970s. Despite costs ranging as high as $50,000, people were attracted by brochures such as that from the California society.

That chance was enough to attract the families of two dying children, a boy from Orange County, Calif., and Genevieve de la Poterie who died of cancer in 1972.

Also drawn to the society were the families of a young man, a couple in their 50s and several elderly persons from as far away as Iowa, Michigan and New York, all of whom had terminal illnesses.

Worthington said the families became members of the non-profit society before entrusting the bodies to the affiliated Cryonic Interment Inc.

He said the parents of the two children — made suspicious because of requests for additional money — insisted on having the youngsters exhumed and buried elsewhere in April 1979. That June, a local reporter learned of the removal and wrote a story about it.

At the time, Worthington had been investigating the Cryonics Society since 1975, when he met a New York family who said they had been cheated out of $2,500, although they never turned over a body to the society.

Because of his active interest in cryonics, Worthington's name showed up in news stories and two more families contacted him, he said. In preparing their suit, he talked to other families.

Both he and Hawes say the families, having already paid initial fees, were asked for more money to maintain the frozen state. When some didn't pay, the society "pulled the plug," Worthington said.

Worthington obtained a court order on behalf of his clients and opened the tomb in the presence of a pathologist in March 1980.

What they found, Worthington said, were four disintegrated bodies in wooden boxes and a sealed capsule believed to contain the three remaining bodies.

$18 million to rescue Acropolis

ATHENS (AP) — The Greek government has announced a 10-year, $18.5-million program to save the ancient monuments on the Acropolis from pollution damage. Archeologists say the Parthenon and other structures on the Athens hill have suffered more damage from air pollution in the past 30 years than in the 25 centuries since they were built during ancient Greece's Golden Age.

Baby food row flares

GENEVA (Reuter) — Baby food manufactures were accused Tuesday of aggressively promoting their products in the Third World in defiance of voluntary guidelines agreed to last October.

The International Baby Food Action Network told a news conference it had more than 200 examples of sales campaigns by 19 companies in 33 countries which violated recommendations of an international conference in which the industry took part.

Organized by the World Health Organization and United Nations Children's Fund, the conference had declared that breast feeding should be actively promoted as the only natural method of feeding babies.

It also called for an end to all sales promotions of powder substitutes for mothers' milk.

Representatives of IBFAN said doctors estimated that 10 million babies suffered malnutrition and sickness every years because of unhygienic bottle feeding, not always involving powdered milk.

The International Council of Infant Food Industries replied that "Previous experience of such allegations shows that these are often based on differences of interpretation while some others are entirely fictitious."

Movies in China

PEKING (UPI) — Chinese and U.S. movie companies have agreed to jointly produce a motion picture in China late this year, the Xinhua News Agency says.

"The Lady and the Panda" will be produced by the China Film Co-Production Corp., Terry Corley and Associates Inc. and a Hong Kong-based company, The Great Wall Movie Enterprises Ltd.

The film's story concerns an American woman who comes to China looking for the ashes of her husband who was murdered while searching for a panda, Xinhua said Friday.

TERMS OF PUBLICATION

F.P. Newspapers Limited shall not be liable for non-insertion of any advertisement beyond the amount paid for such advertisement.

In the event of error occuring the liability of F.P. Newspapers Limited shall not exceed the charge for the space actually occupied by the item in question.

All claims of error in publication shall be made within 12 hours thereafter and if not made shall not be considered. No claim will be allowed for more than one incorrect insertion nor for errors not affecting the value of advertisement.

All estimates of cost are approximate. Advertisers will be charged with space actually used.

All advertising copy will be subject to the approval of the Victoria Press, who reserve the right in its sole discretion to classify, reject or insert copy furnished.

All advertisements must comply with the British Columbia Human Rights Act. This act states no advertisement may state or imply a preference, limitation or specification on the basis of an applicant's race, religion, colour, marital status, ancestry, place of origin, age; or sex (unless the matter relates to the maintenance of public decency AND prior approval has been obtained through the Human Rights Branch).

While every endeavor will be made to forward replies to box numbers to the advertiser as soon as possible, we accept no liability in respect of loss or damage alleged to arise through either failure or delay in forwarding such replies, however caused, whether by negligence or otherwise.

NOTICE OF COPYRIGHT

Full complete and sole copyright in any advertisement produced by F.P. Newspapers Limited is vested in and belongs to F.P. Newspapers Limited, provided, however, that copyright IN THAT PART AND THAT PART ONLY of any such advertisement consisting of illustrations, borders, signatures or similar components which is, or are, supplied to Victoria Press by the advertiser in the form of reproduction proofs, veloxs, etc., and incorporated in said advertisement shall remain in and belong to the advertiser.

39 PERSONALS

THERE MUST BE MORE TO life than just working hard. The special gentleman whom I would enjoy as a friend is as shy of dating games and personal columns as I. He's quietly gregarious, has sense of humor, dignifed, fall between 50-60, active, strong attitudes and principles, is successful, well educated and travelled, preferably a widower. I am self-employed, independant business lady, late 40's, equally comfortable with professional, executive, academic or "artsy" types. I'm tall, recent import, enjoy walks, talks, theatre, symphony, expensive clothes and cars, travelling, caviar or cocoa at bedtime! Entertaining or sometimes just being alone. Would like to discover a deserted island, learn to golf, meet new interesting people. Have no time for married flirts, or people who are dependent, dull, frequently get drunk. Promise discretion, photo appreciated, Victoria Press Box 770.

Full 1-BR, in-law suite down, and a separate workshop with hydro and water. 86 fruit trees, and 37 holly trees round out this property priced at $140,000.

South Oak Bay
Ocean Front

Super 3 or 4-BR, 2-bath home in immaculate shape located in one of Oak Bay's most sought-after areas. Overlooking Shoal Bay toward the Olympics and Trial Island, a view appreciated from almost every room in the house, but especially from the large LR, great sun room and formal DR and kitchen. Renovated several years ago, updating wiring and plumbing while retaining hardwood floors, wooden sash windows and Old World charm as a standard. $198,000.

Broadmead

Don't miss our ads under condominiums for three great listings, and if you're looking for a tourist business or warehouse-office building, we've got one for you under revenue property.

NORTH PENDER ISLAND

This very special property has unsurpassed easterly, southerly and westerly views mostly over Swanson Channel. Complete privacy on 5.9 acres of heavily wooded property consisting of 1280 sq. ft. home which has some of Pender Island's oldest history built into it. A winding driveway gives you the feeling you are entering a paradise all your own. Sunrises from east to beautiful sunsets in the west are some of the sights you see as well as ferry ships, tugboat activity and fishing fleets passing through. This open beam 3-bedroom home is almost completed with many built-in features. Truly an outstanding property at $131,600. Probably none like it on the market.

Call now to make an appointment to buy a property that is likely to be in the top five appreciation bracket.

Truly an outstanding waterfront property looking into the deep South and Vancouver Island area. Let your eyes feast on the large elegant living dining room area with fireplace. Kitchen is handy and especially designed. Plenty of space throughout. Below market value at $105,000.

Back pay claims by PSAC to cost Ottawa millions

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadian Human Rights Commission investigators have found about 3,000 low-paid public servants, mostly women, are victims of a violation of the federal equal-pay-for-work-of-equal-value law.

They have recommended the commission uphold their finding and order remedial measures which could cost the federal government many millions of dollars in back pay and future wage increases.

The group includes 2,548 food service workers, 60 per cent of them women; 82 laundry workers, 52 per cent of them women; and 319 miscellaneous personal service workers, 60 per cent of them women and most of them gatekeepers at national parks.

The finding was made public Wednesday by the Public Service Alliance of Canada, the union which lodged the complaint, and was confirmed by spokesmen for the human rights commission. Commissioners are to meet next week to decide what steps should be taken to settle the case.

The investigators found that the work of the employees is classified by the government as equal in value to work performed by four other categories of general service workers, but "the rates of pay for the female-dominated groups are lower."

The other four categories, 90 per cent of them men, are employees in store services, protective and custodian services, messenger services and building services. The seven categories comprise the 12,700-member general services group of the public service.

Union classification officer Elizabeth Millar said in an interview the wage differences vary not only between the groups, but between regions of the country.

She highlighted this example: In Vancouver, a food service worker is paid $5.01 hourly compared to $6.80 hourly for a store service worker, both classified exactly the same at level two with the same number of classification points.

That's a wage gap of $1.79 hourly. The gap for the same two employees in Ottawa is $1.50 and in the Atlantic is $1.20.

It's not strictly a case of sexual discrimination since men in the groups are also underpaid and, if the union's claim is upheld, would get back pay and a wage increase the same as the women, Ms. Millar said.

This case poses the first major test of the equal-pay-for-work-of-equal-value law which has been on the books since March, 1978, when the Canadian Human Rights Act was passed. The union seeks back pay to that date.

Ms. Millar and commission spokesmen said the case will take a long time to settle because it is complicated.

Turn learning into practice

Home gardeners read many amazing things about plants, insects, and soil, and some are able to quote verbatim what they have read. But the acquired knowledge is useful only when converted to practical application.

We know that nature distributes seeds in an haphazard manner, leaving the results to the law of averages To ouwit this law, all seeds are not able to germinate the following year. Some may lie dormant for five years providing a reserve against adverse conditions.

Whether it is a wise procedue or not, the gardener turns the soil each year, either with a machine or a shovel. In doing so, weed seeds lying on the surface are buried and it has been shown that some of these seeds can lie dormant for as long as 50 years, then germinate as soon as later cultivation brings them back to the surface.

This is the answer to where the beautiful crop of weeds come from every time we disturb the soil.

We can apply this knowledge to a piece of soil in which a lawn is to be sown. After tilling, raking and sowing, the first to germinate are the weed seeds brought to the surface during preparation.

The one thing we object to in a lawn is weeds, yet it is impossible to prevent their growth when the soil is loaded with weed seeds. Sure we can poison the soil and kill the seeds, but nothing else will grow there until all the poison vapors have gone which, ironically, is indicated by the renewed growth of weeds.

Considering the cost in time and labor to make a lawn, a more resonable approach would be to till or dig the area, roughly level, dress lightly with fertilizer, and keep watered the same as the rest of the garden.

Under such ideal conditions the weeds will flourish and can be tilled under before reaching the flowering stage, and he tilling will bring more seeds to the surface. The quantity will decrease with each tilling, and by September when amateur gardeners normally sow their lawns, the lot will be relatively weed-free.

Deep rooted perennial weeds, the ones so useful for bringing up nutrients from the subsoil, will be cut off at the first tilling, but will appear again as the summer progresses. Whether they be curly-dock, thistles or couchgrass, as soon as we spot their location we can lift them out with a shovel and make sure they are no further trouble.

Unfortunately, few home gardeners can tolerate a piece of vacant soil, even when such vacancy can save hours of work and unnecessary expense in later years, as well as giving the lawn of their dreams.

A common practice, therefore, is to grow a crop of potatoes or other vegetables for the season ahead of lawn seeding, on the premise that frequent cultivation will kill out the weeds.

It will do that in areas between the rows of plants if spaded or tilled every two weeks, but the soil in which the plants are growing is not turned over and the dormant weed seeds will remain until the final preparation for sowing.

Weed killers should not be applied until the fourth year after the lawn is sown. Tests have shown the hormones weaken the young grass and result in a poor sod. This means three years of hand weeding to get our dream lawn, or a lot of resowing and patching.

If we wish, we can avoid these underisable chores by making the weed seeds germinate before the grass seed is sown, and we have just three months in which to do it prior to final preparation.

Persnally, I think a bare patch of soil ridding itself of weeds indicates a home gardener applying the things he has read.

Schreyer surgery

The operation involved removing a colostomy, an incision in the colon made during an emergency operation Feb. 19 for diverticulitis, an intestine inflammation.

"All is well," the spokesman said. "The colostomy has been removed. He is awake."

Schreyer will remain in hospital for one week.

Swiftsure was no sleek racing job

By PAT DUFOUR

Thousands will view the massive fleet of Swiftsure boats in the Inner Harbor as they gather for this year's start of the sailing classic on Saturday, May 24.

Few will know the race bears the name of a sailing vessel — although she was no sleek racing job like those that fascinate today's waterfront dreamers.

She was HMS Swiftsure, built at Jarrow-on-Tyne in 1870 with an over-all length of 280 feet, a 55-foot beam and a displacement of 6,910 tons.

So much for the statistics. She arrived in Victoria in April, 1883, and her officers and men became the toasts of the town in the social season that followed.

She was to leave here the following year.

Before she did, however, she reported a sounding of 20 fathoms in the position which now bears her name, the Swiftsure halibut bank that lies off the mouth of the Strait of Juan de Fuca between Cape Flattery and Pachena Point. It's the turn-around point for the race.

Although it is no longer marked by any navigational aid, the United States' lightship Swiftsure was moored over the 3½-mile bank until 1961.

First moored there in 1909, she became a familiar sight to ships from around the world. For the ships that plied the waters of the Pacific Northwest, she marked the point of departure on the first leg of the trek over the Great Circle route to the Orient and the first point of arrival en route to the Strait of Juan de Fuca.

Mushroom anchors weighing up to 8,000 pounds were used to hold her in position. Additional anchors were stowed aboard, ready for use in emergencies when winds and storm-tossed seas threatened to vary her position. Any small error could have caused disaster.

When the lightship first went into service on the bank she carried lanterns that burned sperm whale oil. This was later changed to lard oil and, finally, kerosene. In time all her lights were electric and she was fitted with radar, radio beacons, gyro compasses and hydraulic steering gear.

There were duplicates for every piece of equipment to ensure a swift replacement should it be needed.

Because of a shortage of ships in the early part of the Second World War, the U.S. Navy used her as a defence ship off the west coast.

During that emergency the bank was marked by a lighted whistle buoy. The lightship resumed her position there after the war until she was permanently removed in 1961.

At least once a year Canadian naval vessels have a rendezvous with the famous bank named for their Royal Navy predecessor.

For years now, U.S. Coast Guard cutters and Canadian naval ships have helped form the start line for the Swiftsure and smaller Juan de Fuca classics and patrol the course out to the open Pacific and back.

The boat that must anchor on the Swiftsure Bank to act as a rounding mark for the competing boats is traditionally Canadian. This year it will be HMCS Porte de la Reine.

She swept the field in 1973 and 1974, being first overall, first in her class, first to round the Swiftsure mark and first boat home.

She had to settle for first boat home in 1979, however. The coveted Swiftsure Trophy for first overall went to Ken Pearce's The Pearce Arrow, also of RVYC.

The little 35-footer survived gale-force winds that knocked 108 boats out of the race and came home with flying colors.

Swiftsure arrived in Victoria in 1883 and touched off a string of social events

Kin burned in deep-freeze burial

CHATSWORTH, Calif. (AP) — The lure of life after death proved a trap for the families of nine dead people whose frozen bodies were to be preserved at a cemetery here until they could be revived, says lawyer Michael Worthington.

Instead, the bodies rotted inside their crypts, causing the families disillusionment and grief, he says.

Three families represented by Worthington have filed suit in Los Angeles County Superior Court, seeking $10 million in punitive damages, $500,000 for emotional suffering plus several thousand dollars in expenses.

Worthington says it's a story with elements from science-fiction tales or late-night horror movies about mad scientists.

He believes it was faith in cryogenics — the freezing of bodies for revival in the future when cures are available for fatal diseases — that led families to entrust their deceased loved ones to the now-defunct Cryonics Society of California.

The bodies, including that of eight-year-old Genevieve de la Poterie of Montreal, were to be kept frozen with liquid nitrogen in an underground mausoleum at Oakwood Memorial Park in this Los Angeles County town, in the hopes that someday those people would live again.

But even if cryogenics — or cryonics, as the society dubbed its process — is perfected, these nine people will never be revived.

When investigators opened the tomb in March, instead of a gleaming white-and-steel laboratory, they found badly deteriorated bodies in wooden shipping boxes, Worthington said.

"People will believe in it until it's absolutely proven that they've been defrauded," he said "You cannot shake their confidence. They couldn't live with themselves otherwise."

The families' suit, alleging breach of contract, fraud and negligent misrepresentation, names the former Cryonics Society of California; the affiliated Cryonic Interment Inc.; the two groups' former president, Robert Nelson, and mortician Joseph Klockgether of Buena Park.

"Everyone knew that it was an experimental venture. What happened was that the heirs made promises of a financial nature and they didn't keep them and the society had to shut off the care system."

John Hager, a Los Angeles lawyer representing Klockgether, said his client was simply performing services as a mortician for Nelson and "in many cases, he wasn't even paid for what ~~he~~ did."

Los Angeles Police Department investigator George Hawes said police are not involved in the matter because the families who are suing live out-of-state.

The purported possibilities of cryonics began attracting interest in the early 1970s. Despite costs ranging as high as $50,000, people were attracted by brochures such as that from the California society.

That chance was enough to attract the families of two dying children, a boy from Orange County, Calif., and Genevieve de la Poterie who died of cancer in 1972.

Also drawn to the society were the families of a young man, a couple in their 50s and several elderly persons from as far away as Iowa, Michigan and New York, all of whom had terminal illnesses.

Worthington said the families became members of the non-profit society before entrusting the bodies to the affiliated Cryonic Interment Inc.

He said the parents of the two children — made suspicious because of requests for additional money — insisted on having the youngsters exhumed and buried elsewhere in April 1979. That June, a local reporter learned of the removal and wrote a story about it.

At the time, Worthington had been investigating the Cryonics Society since 1975, when he met a New York family who said they had been cheated out of $2,500, although they never turned over a body to the society.

Because of his active interest in cryonics, Worthington's name showed up in news stories and two more families contacted him, he said. In preparing their suit, he talked to other families.

Both he and Hawes say the families, having already paid initial fees, were asked for more money to maintain the frozen state. When some didn't pay, the society "pulled the plug," Worthington said.

Worthington obtained a court order on behalf of his clients and opened the tomb in the presence of a pathologist in March 1980.

What they found, Worthington said, were four disintegrated bodies in wooden boxes and a sealed capsule believed to contain the three remaining bodies.

$18 million to rescue Acropolis

ATHENS (AP) — The Greek government has announced a 10-year, $18.5-million program to save the ancient monuments on the Acropolis from pollution damage. Archeologists say the Parthenon and other structures on the Athens hill have suffered more damage from air pollution in the past 30 years than in the 25 centuries since they were built during ancient Greece's Golden Age.

Baby food row flares

GENEVA (Reuter) — Baby food manufactures were accused Tuesday of aggressively promoting their products in the Third World in defiance of voluntary guidelines agreed to last October.

The International Baby Food Action Network told a news conference it had more than 200 examples of sales campaigns by 19 companies in 33 countries which violated recommendations of an international conference in which the industry took part.

Organized by the World Health Organization and United Nations Children's Fund, the conference had declared that breast feeding should be actively promoted as the only natural method of feeding babies.

It also called for an end to all sales promotions of powder substitutes for mothers' milk.

Representatives of IBFAN said doctors estimated that 10 million babies suffered malnutrition and sickness every years because of unhygienic bottle feeding, not always involving powdered milk.

The International Council of Infant Food Industries replied that "Previous experience of such allegations shows that these are often based on differences of interpretation while some others are entirely fictitious."
